Playing material from their latest album, Another World, as well as many of their greatest hits, Maggie (deep-voiced), Suzzy (medium-range), and Terre (high, or soprano as they say) Roche played for about two hours, accompanying themselves on guitars and piano. On the newer material they were also accompanied by synthesizer player Libby McLaren who provided the drums, bass, and lead guitars, as well as piano, organ, and, in an occasional moment of glory, background vocals.

The essence of the Roches' sound consists of three part harmonies and entertaining lyrics. They play what could be considered some kind of folk music. The synthesizer gives the Roches a much flashier sound than they had two years ago when they played at the Calvin. Then they used a casiotone to provide as a rhythm machine and bass.

What makes the Roches' flash so special is the ironic context in which it is situated. Because of the straightforwardness of the performers, to see them rock out is really an entertainment experience. They realize that they are on stage and that yet they have no desire to mask their personalities, so when Maggie (the quiet one) steps out to dance, it isn't Madonna the audience sees but a real person who is conscious of her position as a performer and yet at the same time maintains her real personality, which the audience understands. In other words she has fun without having to pose.

They played all their greatest hits, including many songs from their first album including "Hammond Song" and "The Train." They also played a long version of "The Troubles" ending with a canon of the words boyfriend, ocean, Ireland. They also sang the "Hallelujah Chorus" as well as all of the new album. For an encore they played their signature song, "We"("We are Maggie, Terre, and Suzzy/Maggie and Terre and Suzzy Roche/We don't give out our ages/and we don't give out our phone numbers/Sometimes our voices give out/but not our ages or phone numbers"). They finished the show with one of their best songs, "Loosing True".

Omegamen David Peniston and Derrick Lewis took time out to share the fraternity spirit while on the CCEBS Career Library Saturday

CCEBS reconstructs Career library

In an effort to provide a more effective service to CCEBS students, the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black Students, in collaboration with Omega Psi Phi Fraternity Inc. and the Sweethearts of Kappa Alpha Sigma and Omega Psi Phi fraternities, Saturday began a joint project in the reconstruction of the New Africa House Career Library.

Coordinated by CCEBS Advisor Cheryll Stanley, CCEBS student employee Linda Mendes and D. Anderson Hooker, a member of Omega Psi Phi and also a CCEBS advisor, the project is the first of a series of services the Omegas plan for this semester.

The library has been in existence since the inception of CCEBS in 1968. However, it has not been in operation for some time. The library will be staffed by qualified individuals who have experience in different aspects of graduate studies and careers. Jane Austin from the University Career Center is expected to be a member of the staff.

"Because it is an ongoing process we are soliciting information and suggestions" to provide an effective service, Hooker said. Suggestions may be made to any member of Omega Psi Phi or to the CCEBS office in New Africa House.

In an interview, Stanley said she was seeking volunteers for the project, and that Hooker suggested the Omegas offer their services.

Duckworth Grange, a member of Omega Psi Phi, said, "It enables students to come to an atmosphere where they are looked upon equally and not be intimidated to seek assistance. For example, a student may need a book or information on a black person but he may feel inmtimated to ask a librarian. Therefore; he may want use this resource at ease and in a comfortable atmosphere."

Although the library is primarily for CCEBS students it is not exclusive .

Thank You UMass/Amherst Students for helping us keep high quality, low cost public higher education accessible to all of us. Thank you for your support of the State Student Association of Mass. on last semester's billing.

1/15/86 SSAM press conference with Governor Dukakis and state legislators over the passing into law of the student regent/student government bill. The new law establishes for the first time a student voting member on the Board of Regents, as well as recognize Student Government Associations across the state as official representatives of the respective student bodies.

In a letter to the UMass Board of Trustees, in support of the appeal for Funding for SSAM, Republican Middlesex County State Senator Robert Buell wrote:

"In the last two years, I have had contact with the leadership of SSAM on issues ranging from the regents' tuition policy and financial aid to student voter registration. I am confident that the work of the Association is in the best interests of the students on the Amherst Campus, as well as those attending her sister institutions of public higher learning."

- In 1983/84 SSAM, with bipartisan support in the State House turned a 15% tuition increase (passed over by the Board of Regents) into a 6.9% increase
  - A Savings to UMass/Amherst Students of $78 each -
- In 1984/85 SSAM convinced the Board of Regents, to roll back a 7.2% tuition increase to a 6.0% increase
  - A Savings to UMass/Amherst Students of $24. each -
- In 1985/86 SSAM led the way in getting a bill passed into law that put a student on the Board of Regents.
- SSAM has constantly networked with students across the country in working to preserve Federal Financial Aid programs.

SSAM has a statewide student newsletter, a radio program on WHTT in Boston, an office in downtown Boston, an active alumni association. SSAM offers credit internship programs to students of all majors. For more info call the SSAM office (617-357-1995)

Swimmers take 2nd straight at UNH

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swim team turned the tables on the University of New Hampshire on Saturday, routing the Wildcats, 80-60 at Boyden Pool.

UMass, 6-5, lost 111-29 last season as UNH ran up its points on the then-struggling Minutewomen. But UMass, led by double winners Allison Uzzo and Julie Wilkins, made the Wildcats the fourth team they lost to last season, beat this year.

"We're really excited, it's been a great season," said UM coach Bob Newcomb. "It's great seeing how far we've come from last year."

UMass has its last dual meet on Tuesday at Mt. Holyoke, an expected Minutewomen romp that would make UMass 7-5, a vast improvement over the 3-9 mark they had over 1985.

UM won the first relay and went 1-2 in trhe first three individual events to seal the win early. The team of Wilkins, Melissa Waller, Lori Carroll and Sue Freitas won the 200 medley relay in 1:56.40 to open the meet.

Maura Skelley then took the 1,000 (11:20.6) with Margaret Cameron taking second. The 200 went to Uzzo in 2:00.46 with Kris Henson second in 2:00.52. The 100 backstroke was also tight with Wilkins' 1:05.41 edging teammate Michelle Leary's 1:05.51.

Other UM winners included Carroll in the 200 butterfly (2:18.49) with Henson taking another second. The 200 backstroke was another victory for Wilkins, in 2:19.30 as Leary was second.

Uzzo ruled the 500, winning with a 5:23.85 as Henson scored again with her third second place.

"We've turned a big corner this year," said Newcomb. "It's been an awesome turnaround considering the troubles we had last season. I'm looking forward to the rest of the season. I think we could do very well in the New Englands (Feb. 21-23 at Maine)."

Dragons edge UM gymnasts

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

In a match decided by .65 of a point, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team was edged by the Cortland State Red Dragons 254.70-254.05 Saturday afternoon at the Boyden Gymnastics Center.

The Minutemen (3-4) went into the day's matchup with confidence, and rightly so. They had never lost to the Red Dragons in 14 years of competition. But consistency all around by Cortland (4-3), and an exceptional effort on the parallel allowed them to take their first victory over the Minutemen.

"This is by far the best team I've coached here in my seven years," Cortland head coach Eric Malmberg said after his narrow victory. "Beating UMass is definitely an indication of that."

The Minutemen were leading the match through four events but then suffered a breakdown on the parallel bars. Coincidentally, the parallel bars happened to be the Cortland strongpoint of the meet, scoring 43.75 to UMass's 42.4, and that wrapped the match up for the visitors.

Minuteman head coach Roy Johnson had conflicting feelings after the match. "It was a great meet," Johnson said, "They (Cortland) really look tough this year."

But the coach also showed a little disappointment his team's efforts of late. "We definitely should be further along at this point of the season," he noted. "It's tough to make changes in the system after working on the same things since day one."

The men will be in action again on Saturday, facing MIT at home at 1 p.m.

Smith closes on assist mark; UM continues streak vs. URI

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I.—If he can keep up his current pace, junior point Carl Smith will set the University of Massachusetts career assist record in front of his home crowd.

With 486 career assists, the 5-10 co-captain needs just 32 more to tie the late Alex Eldridge's record of 518. Eldridge set the record over 104 games. Smith will do it in 82 if he maintains his current pace.

This season, Smith is averaging 7.3 assists per game to lead the Atlantic 10 Conference. With four games coming up, Smith needs to average eight per game to tie the mark. The fourth home game is Feb. 17, a Monday night against Temple.

However, any more 11 assist nights like he had against Rhode Island and the mark will fall alot sooner. Smith already holds the school and league record for assists in a year (212 his freshman year) and has tied the school and league mark with 15 against Duquesne on Jan. 23.

"I didn't even realize I was getting that close," said Smith. "I was thinking about the game record, I want 16 some time, but the career record seemed so far away. I'd love to set the record at home."

Whither the Rams: UMass won its fifth straight game against URI on Saturday. Coach Ron Gerlufsen is 6-1 lifetime against URI and 4-0 against Ram coach Brendan Malone. UMass has also won eight of its last nine against URI. The Rams appear to be a program in trouble. They suited up only 10 players against UMass and 1984-85 high scorer Bryan Mitchell, a talented transfer from Pitt, registered his third DNP-coach's decision of the season. Despite his 10.4 point scoring average, Malone has benched Mitchell. Malone himself also appears troubled, storming from the court after the game, refusing to shake hands with UM assistant coaches or players and not talking to the refs.

the bench at the time, and Chase lasted until the 3:30 mark of OT, when he picked up his official fifth.

The OT saw two Sutton jumpers sandwiched around a Scotti foul shot and UM led 58-55. Owens then hit two free throws with 2:26 left before Brown's hoop with 1:50 left.

Evans hit to make it 60-59 with 1:30 left. During UM's possession, Smith missed, but Brown kept the ball alive and the Minutemen got a new 45 seconds. Smith missed again with 11 seconds to go and the Rams called time at midcourt with six seconds left. Scott's jumper was short and Milum grabbed the rebound to end the game.

"It was a good win for us, hopefully we'll see some people at the Cage on Monday," said Gerlufsen. "These home games are big for us."

Minuteman Mutterings: UM shot 43 percent at the field and 50 percent from the line (8-of-16). Chase had 13 rebounds. . .Mike Mundy did a good first half relief job for Smith with eight good minutes. . UM is at home for four straight games now starting tonight. They will also face Rutgers (Thursday), St. Joseph's (Saturday) and Temple (the Monday after).

Minutemen take first road win

URI tumbles in overtime, 60-59

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I.—It wasn't pretty or particularly memorable, but it was a win on the road, so the University of Massachusetts basketball team isn't about to complain.

In a game that featured a phantom foul on a player not in the game, the return of Tom Emerson from the forgotten and a display of poise by the Minuteman freshman, UMass defeated the University of Rhode Island, 60-59 in overtime Saturday night in the Keaney Gym before 1,459.

The win puts UMass at 7-14 on the season, but more importantly snaps their four-game losing streak and a longer skid of 10 road losses (11 dating back to last year). UMass is now 4-8 in the Atlantic 10, good enough for sixth place, two games ahead of Penn State in the loss column. UMass hosts Penn State tonight at the Curry Hicks Cage (see box).

"I'm really pleased that we showed the desire to win," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "We could've done a few things a little better, but we won on the road and that was our goal coming into this game."

The Minutemen, led by sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton's 23 points, struggled with the Rams before freshman David Brown's 17-footer with 1:50 left in the overtime proved to be the game-winner.

The Rams (7-14, 3-10) led 29-28 at halftime behind 16 points from freshman forward John Evans. UMass freshman David Brown had 13 of his 19 on six-of-seven shooting in the period.

The young teams (five freshmen, four sophomores and a junior started) started the half slowly before Brown's 15-footer from the baseline put UMass up, 41-39 with 9:33 to go. Junior point guard Carl Smith's drive up the middle made it 43-39 and URI coach Brendan Malone went for the time out with 8:52 to go.

Emerson played a big role in UM's comeback. Rising from the pines when starting center John Milum picked up his fourth foul with 16:43 left, the 6-10 space-eater did the job defensively and made few mistakes.

Entering the game with UM trailing 33-31, Emerson help rally his team and even showed his seldom-seen aggressive side, going after Ram center Bonzie Colson with 6:22 to go after taking a shot to the face. He had only two points and a rebound, but according to Gerlufsen, did the job with 21 quality minutes.

"Tommy did nice work on defense and was a calming influence for us," said the coach. "Without Sean Mosby (out with an ankle injury), we were hurting for big men. Tom really helped out." URI did however stage a comeback. A three-point play by Chris Scotti with 1:44 to go madse it 51-50. Carlton Owens' two foul shots with 1:06 left suddenly made it 52-51 and UM was staring at another tough road loss.

"I was thinking that we were going to blow it again," said Sutton. "But I think we're beyond that now. We weren't about to let it get away."

A key Duane Chase offensive rebound led to two Sutton free throws with 31 seconds to go.

He missed the first, but made the second to tie the game at 52. Chase then drilled a one-and-one with 15 seconds to go, getting fouled after making a steal. Owens then missed a runner, but Colson snared the rebound and dropped in a six-footer to tie the game at 54 with six seconds to go. Sutton missed a chance at the end as his jumper fell off the rim as time ran out.

Chase didn't even belong in the game, committing his fifth foul with 6:22 to go in regulation. The URI official scorer however, gave the foul to Wilbert Hicks, who was on

UM hosts Penn State tonight

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team returns home to the Curry Hicks Cage tonight, facing the Nittany Lions of Penn State in a key Atlantic 10 Conference battle.

The game (7:30 p.m. with plenty of free student seats available) shapes up as a battele for sixth place in the league as the Lions are 4-10 and the Minutemen are 4-8 in conference play. The top six teams in the league receive a bye into the quarterfinals of the league playoffs later this month.

PSU is 10-13 overall, losing to Duquesne, 65-55 on Saturday. The Minutemen were 69-60 winners over Duquesne earlier this season.

When the teams last met, the Lions came away with a 64-63 win at State College despite Lorenzo Sutton's 29 points. The game also marks the debut of the UMass Minutes, a dance group that will perform at halftime.

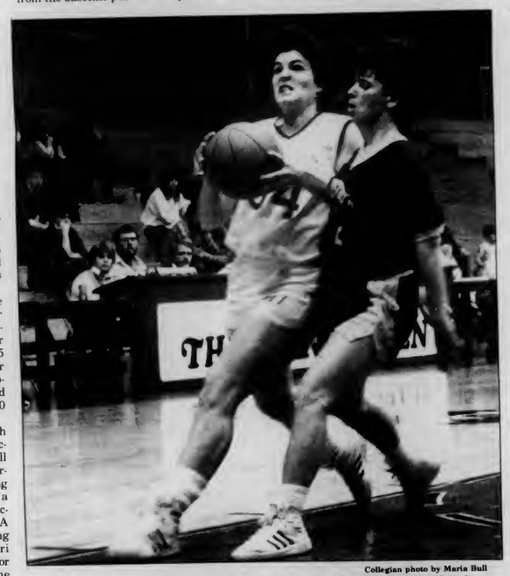
Women lose to Hawks

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

Sometimes, statistics do tell the whole story.

A quick look at the stat sheet from Saturday's game between the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team and St. Joseph's University clearly tells why the Minutewomen dropped a hard fought 80-73 decision to the Lady Hawks at the Curry Hicks Cage.



UMass, (9-12 overall and 2-8 in the Atlantic-10), shot 49 percent from the floor and got balanced scoring, led by senior Barbara Hebel's game high 23 points. Senior guard Juanita Matthews chipped in 15 points and freshman forward Beth Wilbor added 12 points off the bench. Senior captain Jerrie Bernier and senior forward Karen Damminger both contributed 10 points.

Such numbers are usually good enough to win, until you consider what St. Joe's accomplished. The Lady Hawks, (16-3 overall and 7-2 in the A-10), were led by Teresa Carmicheal's 18 points (five-of-seven shooting from the floor), and burned the nets for a sizzling 73 percent from the field, connecting on 33-of-46 attempts from the field. A majority of those shots came from long distance, with guards Debbie Black, Terri Mohr and Stephanie Hughes combining for 36 points on 18-of-20 shooting from the field.

"They proved to be a real problem," UMass coach Barbara Stevens said. "We tried to go man-to-man to shut down the outside, but that opened up their inside game. When we tried to stop the inside game, they killed us with their perimeter shooting."

The Minuetwomen hung tough throughout the game, but found themselves trailing by 17 points, 32-15, with 5:11 left in the first half. But UMass went into haltime only down by eight, 36-28, thanks to some long-range sharpshooting by Matthews and Wilbor.

The absence of UM's 6-1 sophomore center Sue Burtoft (broken finger) was a determining factor however, as the Lady Hawks pulled away in the second half by constantly stuffing the ball inside to Carmicheal and forward Kim Foley (10 points on four-of-six shooting), taking advantage of the lack of Minutewoman height and late game foul trouble.

Novak named offensive coach

Frank Novak, the current wide receivers coach of the USFL's Birmingham Stallions, will be named associate football coach at the University of Massachusetts early this week.

Novak, 47, was one of the finalists for the UM head coaching job when Bob Stull resigned on New Year's Eve to take the head job at Texas-El Paso. The UMass position went to former assistant Jim Reid, who in turn has offered Novak a job.

Novak was offensive coordinator at Holy Cross under Neil Wheelwright and Rick Carter before moving to the pro ranks. He was also being considered by several NFL teams as an assistant and as the head coach of Leominister High, one of the best high school programs in the East.

At UMass, Novak will help coordinate the offense while Reid will concentrate on the defense. He is expected to sign a one-year contract some time this week.

With the move, Reid has two more assistant coaching positions to fill. He told the Collegian Thursday that he hopes to finalize his staff by late this month.

In other football news, the list of UMass high school recruits will be released on Wednesday. The team did very well, having received committments from several outstanding prep players, primarily offensive and defensive linemen.

UMass rolls on

Swimmers finish season undefeated

By JOE ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team completed an undefeated dual meet season with a 75-38 victory over the University of New Hampshire, Friday night in Durham.

UMass 11-0, won nine events and set three pool records on way to the rout. Senior Drew Donovan continued his supremacy in freestyling (he is ranked first in New England in the 50, 100, 200, and 500 freestyle events) by winning the 1000 freestyle event and with a time 9:54.95 to set the first pool record of the night. Freshman, Chris Payson followed him in second with a 10:15.39.

John Turner set the second pool record in the 200 backstroke with a 1:57.23. Marc Surette's 2:08.45 was good enough for third.

Jim Kuhns, Paul Hartnett, Craig Hanniean and Donovan teamed for a 3:17.41 in the 400 freestyle relay which was the final pool record.

Hartnett had a solid meet. His 1:49.97 was his personal best and good enough for third in the 200 freestyle.

"That (1:49.97) was his best time," UM coach Russ Yarworth said. "He also had a 48.9 split in the relay which is great. This is a good indication that when the rest of the team tapers down they're really gonna pop," Yarworth said.

Yarworth was also hoping diver Pat Mullen might qualify for nationals but his combined total of 401.2 feel short of the required 450 points. The Minutemen were able to get Mullen a shot by having him dive 11 times off the one-meter and he did win the first set with a score of 166.35. He placed second in the second set. Tim Ramacciotti placed third in both sets.

Other firsts at the UNH meet included Kuhns in the 50 freestyle with a 22.64, Paul McDonough with a 2:01.06 in the 200 individual medley, Ed Burton's 2:05.55 in the 200 butterfly, and Mike Hoover's 2:17.83 in the 200 breaststroke. Also, Turner, Hoover, Burton and Jim Flannery teamed to win the 400 medley relay in 3:43.45.

Area residents will join in rally

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

About 50 people from the Amherst area have signed up to join thousands more in Philadelphia Saturday for a march and rally against racism.

The National Mobilization Against Racism, a Philadelphia-based coalition of activists and citizen's groups, called the demonstration in response to arson and other attacks on black families, the torching of a Jewish community center and alleged police brutality in the Puerto Rican community, according to a statement.

Following the MOVE bombing last spring, in which 11 people were killed and 61 houses destroyed when Philadelphia police dropped a satchel charge on the home of a black back-to-nature group, the coalition was organized to protest racism in Philadelphia and what the organizers see as the Reagan administration's encouragement of racism.

Marchers said they felt an urgent need to confront both the extreme right wing on racist violence and the Reagan administration on issues such as affirmative action and the military budget.

"I'm going to protest against the Reagan administration's policies and also to make a statement against what I see as an increasingly racist atmosphere nationwide," said Margaret Aikenhead, a teacher's aide and activist from Northampton.

Asserting that racism is a national problem, Commuter Area Government spokesman David Martin said a multiracial coalition is important because whites have the economic and institutional privilege to enable them to enforce their prejudices.

Whites have control of most of the resources of this country, Martin said. "Whites are the ones who are racist; it's our problem."

Mitch Gaslin, a graduate student in regional planning and a Radical Student Union member, said he saw a relationship between the violence in Philadelphia and federal policy.

Sign changing incident sparks controversy

Campaign for MassPIRG, SSAM referendum strong

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Push has come to shove for both sides' campaign practices concerning the referendum to be held tomorrow and Thursday that will decide the fate of the present method of funding two University of Massachusetts student organizations.

The incident involves sign changing by the group initiating the referendum. One of the groups whose funding is at stake says this was done to confuse voters.

The issue centers on the automatic $2 per semester charge levied to UMass students for the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group and the $1 per semester charge for the State Student Association of Massachusetts.

If students do not wish to pay the fees they must check a box on their tuition bills for a fee waiver, which is referred to as a negative checkoff.

Students for Participatory Democracy, a 20-member group formed last semester, is seeking to eliminate the optional fees.

Two of SPD's founders, Brian Darling and Tony Rudy, said they used their own personal money Sunday to make copies of MassPIRG signs which originally read "Save MassPIRG – Vote No," and had a line with "No" checked off.

Darling and Rudy admitted they changed the position of the check mark from 'No" to "Yes" and the legend at the bottom from "Vote No" to "Vote Yes," after which they ran off 100 copies.

"We were neutralizing their [MassPIRG's] deceptive posters," Darling said. "This isn't a vote to save MassPIRG, this is a vote on their unfair funding techniques."

MassPIRG members said the signs were deceptive and unethical.

REAL

BOGUS

"We want to run a fair election," said Deirdre Cummings, MassPIRG member. "This is not fair to students. It's just confusing what is going on."

Rudy defended the sign change because he said MassPIRG makes false accusations that his group wants to get rid of the lobbying group.

"All the MassPIRG signs are deceptive. One of their signs called us radical right-wingers," Rudy said. "They are clouding the issue. The issue is funding."

Cummings said the optional funding system is imperative to the group's existence and is justified because students approved the system in 1982.

"We won't exist on this campus without the present funding method," Cummings said.

Cummings said a referendum asking students if they favored the negative check off method for funding the group's was last held in 1982. She said 89 percent of the campus voted in favor of MassPIRG and now about 80 percent of students pay the fee.

Rayna Sargent, another MassPIRG member, said the sign changing "is not an isolated incident at UMass. Clearly down the line we differ on the issues."

Sargent said MassPIRG has about 110 chapters in 22 states, including 24 chapters in Massachusetts.

Former CIA official to discuss U.S. policies

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The highest ranking CIA official openly to criticize the agency says that during his University of Massachusetts lecture tonight he will explain why US policies will lead to the world's end within our lifetime.

John Stockwell, a former CIA case officer in Africa and Vietnam, and a former adviser to the top-secret National Security Council in Washington, is scheduled to speak at 8 p.m. tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium.

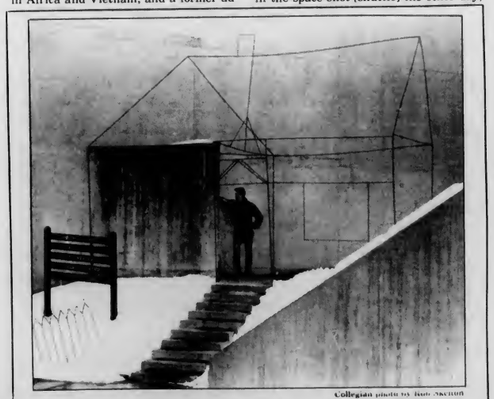
Stockwell, in a telephone interview from his Austin, Texas, home last week, said, "I'm not likely to die of old age. We've got 52,000 nuclear weapons and as we've seen in the space shot [shuttle] the other day, these things have malfunctions."

He said that during his lecture, which is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, he will elaborate on a series of "whys" in US foreign policy. Questions, Stockwell said, may include: Why does the US go to war so often in its history? How does this relate to the nuclear buildup which openly provokes the Soviet Union and deceives the American people about the nuclear arms race? Why does the CIA manipulate the press, overthrow democracies and install military dictators? And, why is the US pouring arms and money into El Salvador and preparing to invade Nicaragua?

"We're talking about the fate of the world," Stockwell said. "We're talking about the certainty of the US getting involved in another war in a few years.

"We're talking about a budget of several millions of dollars that's being spent to slaughter people and bring havoc to 50 corners of the world," Stockwell said.

"These are the things the government is doing," he said. "The American people are not getting the truth and the reason why."



Stockwell said he has been on the inside and can inform his audience on what is truly occurring.

"I've been down to Nicaragua and talked to women who have been gang-raped by these animals [contra guerrillas] trained in Florida," Stockwell said.

After serving three years as a US Marine Corps reconnaisance officer trained in parachute and scuba diving, Stockwell was recruited by the CIA in 1964. He resigned from the agency in 1977 after having served three tours of duty in Africa, a two-year stint as officer-in-charge of Tay Ninh Province in Vietnam and receiving the agency's Medal of Merit and several other commendations.

Stockwell appeared on CBS's "60-Minutes" last month because of the job he held as case officer in charge of the agency's mid-seventies venture in Angola. The operation failed in its aim to slow the progress of Agostinhow Neto's pro-Moscow Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola.

Two weeks ago, Stockwell said, he was on Capitol Hill countering the efforts of Angolan guerrilla Jonas Savimbi, who was seeking US aid for his rebels. The Clark Amendment outlawed aid to the Angolan rebels in 1975, but the amendment was repealed by Congress last year. "Savimbi is a terrorist," Stockwell said.

NASA: Booster rocket hit shuttle fuel tank

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA investigators believe Challenger's right booster rocket may have pivoted into the huge space shuttle fuel tank, crushing it and setting off the fireball that destroyed the ship and killed its crew.

A space agency source, who declined to be identified, said such a scenario - first outlined yesterday in the industry magazine Aviation Week and Space Technology - is one of several possibilities under examination.

A major focus of the investigation has been the possibility that a leak between segments of the right booster allowed a plume of flame to spurt toward Challenger's liquid fuel tank, either puncturing it or raising the pressure inside to cause the explosion.

The source said other avenues of investigation include wind shears aloft as the 4.5-million-pound shuttle stack climbed through a period of maximum stresses, and a seal leak between two segments of the booster rocket that caused a sideways thrust and put additional structural loads on the ship.

The presidential commission investigating the Jan. 28 accident met in secret session yesterday to discuss an internal memorandum last July warning officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration that shuttle flight safety was "being compromised by potential failure" of booster seals.

"Failure during launch would certainly be catastrophic," one NASA analyst warned in a memorandum, according to The New York Times.

Arriving for yesterday's commission meeting, chairman William P. Rogers said the Times story gave the impression that NASA had not told his panel everything it knew about the booster's history.

"That's not the case and I hope we can correct that," he said, adding that the public will learn more about the documents at an open meeting Tuesday.

Aviation Week said a redesign of the joints might cause the next shuttle mission to be postponed a year.

The magazine said NASA's interim accident review board believes that the plume of fire jetting out of the side of the right rocket booster caused the bottom half of the rocket to separate from the tank.

"The lower portion of the booster then rotated outward from the climbing vehicle," Aviation Week said. "As the bottom of the booster moved outward, its top section pivoted into the external tank and crushed the upper right side of the tank."

Pictures taken of the liftoff show a bright that killed the seven-member crew and destroyed the $1.5 billion orbiter," Aviation Week said, giving no attribution.

Official vote canvass begun

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The government-dominated National Assembly held the first meeting yesterday on its official vote canvass, which by law will determine who won the disputed presidential election.

In the slow count of ballots cast last Friday, the government election commission showed President Ferdinand E. Marcos leading by 53 percent to 47. An unofficial count by a citizens' poll-watching group of more votes showed challenger Corazon Aquino ahead by the same margin.

The election was marred by violence, which continued yesterday. A gunman fired at about 50 Aquino supporters in an open truck from which Mrs. Aquino had delivered a speech earlier, killing a 20-year-old man and wounding a woman.

At the gathering in suburban Makati, Mrs. Aquino had told 2,000 cheering supporters she was "claiming the people's due," and pledged: "We are going to take power. The people have won this election."

Mrs. Aquino accusses Marcos of widespread election fraud in attempting to extend his 20 years of rule over this archipelago of 7,100 islands.

Both Aquino supporters and official U.S. election observers called the slow count an attempt by Marcos to manipulate the results. The observers left for home yesterday.

Tylenol pulled from shelves

YONKERS, N.Y. (AP) — A grocery chain pulled Tylenol from store shelves in 26 states yesterday as a "precautionary measure" after authorities said a 23-year-old woman who had taken the pain-relieving drug died of cyanide poisoning.

A&P Food Stores ordered the removal from all of its stores, which number more than 1,000, company spokesman Michael Rourke said.

"We did that as a precautionary measure this afternoon pending the outcome of an investigation being conducted by the Yonkers police department," he said.

Claire Palermo, a spokeswoman for Westchester County Executive Andrew P. O'Rourke, said the woman died Saturday after visiting friends in Yonkers, and had taken two capsules from a 24-capsule bottle of Extra-Strength Tylenol.

The US Food and Drug Administration, a statement issued in Washington, said that it was joining the investigation.

The FDA advises that residents in the Yonkers, New York area, should avoid taking Tylenol capsules until more is known. As a special precaution, the FDA further advises consumers to avoid code ADF916, expiration 5-87. The lot has been in distribution since August 1985 without other known instances," the statement said.

Driving a bus: For students, it's not just a job

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

Guiding 12-ton buses through the five-college area gives student drivers a challenging and exciting alternative to the typical student job fare.

John King, a sophomore management major, says driving is a great job.

"I've had lots of jobs, but this is the best. The bosses are excellent, and the people working here are very courteous," he said. King has been driving for two semesters, and said he has no plans to quit.

The white and blue buses, which provided over 1.2 million area rides with free transportation to jobs and classes last year, cost over $150,000 each, and are owned by the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority, a non-profit public agency based in Springfield.

The PVTA was established in August 1974, and took over the five-college transportation system in 1980. The authority subsidizes individual companies to operate their buses.

Transportation between the five colleges was first provided by taxis, according to Bill Brandt, business manager for Five Colleges, Inc., but "cost and inconvenience [illegible] his introduction of the "pickles" green school buses [illegible] colleges.

Until PVTA took over the service, stops were not made between campuses, Brandt added.

The agency is funded from federal, state and local sources. Five Colleges Inc., a coordinating center for the region's colleges and their resources, provides 10 percent of the capital outlay for the system. The center is budgeted to pay $375,000 of the total $575,000 operating expenses for 1985-86, according to Brandt.

Money from the student governments of the five colleges are pooled through Five Colleges Inc. to provide funding. In addition, the towns of Northampton, Hadley, South Hadley, Amherst, Sunderland and Belchertown contribute directly to PVTA.

Most routes in the five-college system are operated by UMass Transit, with the exception of the Northampton-Amherst line, which is operated by Western Mass. Bus Lines of Northampton.

Brandt said Five Colleges Inc. "has asked Western Mass Bus Lines to hire students whenever possible," to get student funds back in the hands of students.

UMass Transit uses exclusively student drivers. Its fleet of 27 buses is operated by 155 students on varying schedules, according to Assistant Operations Manager Paul Blanchard.

Drivers are paid between $4.60 to $5.55 an hour, and need a Class 2 driver's license. In-house training is provided, and a road test at the Registry of Motor Vehicles in Northampton is scheduled by UMass Transit, Blanchard said.

One advantage of driving a bus is that students are allowed to fill out time-exemption request forms, where drivers can block out times they wish to leave open. During these hours, classes can be rearranged to other times, making it easier on drivers' weekly schedules, said John Gonter, 22, a student who has been driving for three and half years.

You never know if they're [forms] going to work or not," Gonter said. "Sometimes they [scheduling office] honor them and sometimes they don't."

Bill Barrett, director of transportation and parking for UMass Transit, said their buses were involved in 73 accidents in the past year. The figure includes accidents ranging from "fender-benders on up," but no injuries were reported, he said.

Driving one of these means more than just following the yellow line.

Success of gay program celebrated

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

A retreat celebrating the success of the Program for Gay and Lesbian Concerns, which began last October, is planned for Saturday.

Organizers say group discussions, workshops, games and other group activities will be held to accomplish four goals. The first is to acknowledge the program's advances.

"In the past year the gay, lesbian and bisexual community has managed, through [illegible] work and efforts, to get a program [illegible] been there before," said Bruce Yeskel, co-director for the program.

The retreat will also celebrate the increased attention the gay community has received from the administration and students.

"We will be dealing with our differences between men and women, and people of color in our community," said Yeskel.

The event will also address persons who are coming out of the closet, people who are visible in the community, and those who attend meetings for social rather than political reasons.

Organizers also aim to discuss and teach leadership skills.

The fourth goal will be to address the future of the gay community.

"We will talk about where we will go from here and how we will work toward accomplishing common goals," Yeskel said.

The retreat is aimed at lesbian, gay or bisexual persons, but heterosexuals are also welcome to attend.

The leaders of the retreat ask that people call and register in advance because lunch will be served at the meeting.

The retreat will be held from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Feb. 15 in the Southwest Women's Center, located on the first floor, north side, of Mackimmie House.

It is sponsored by the Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns. For more information call 545-4824.

Cars a problem at UMass

By JENNIFER HEMENWAY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts is not the best place to park a car. Aside from heavy competition for certain lots, cars get ticketed, towed, vandalized and stolen.

There is no clear solution to the problem of limited parking on campus, said Gerald O'Neil, the director of public safety, but he offered one suggestion: "I recommend not having a car on campus. Give it a lot of thought before bringing a car here."

Vandalism often occurs when cars are crowded in various hidden spaces, he said.

"The basic problem is people not locking their cars. They shouldn't make it easy for others to get into their cars," he said.

Vandalism occurs at almost every location on campus, especially in lot 22 beyond the Southwest Residential Area, lot 41 behind the School of Education and the three outlying P lots.

O'Neil said most of the arrests made in the Fearing P lot have been for the thefts of cars.

About $300,000 worth of tickets were issued in 1984.

"All the money collected in tickets goes to the ticket fund which is used for financial aid," he said.

"We don't have a favorite spot [to ticket]. Southwest gets a lot because there are so many residents and limited parking," O'Neil said.

It is more of a problem to park on campus from Dec. 1 to Apr. 1 because of the winter parking laws, when it is not permitted on the street at night, O'Neil said.

In order to obtain a parking sticker for certain parking lots, students must get on a waiting list, said Barbara Kunieczny of the parking office.

More lots are needed on campus because it is difficult to get a space close to a specific dorm, she said.

The price of the stickers, which are issued for a full year, from Sept. 1 to Aug. 31., range from $8 to $153.

Some of the more difficult lots to obtain sticker for include lot 63, across from Hasbrouck Laboratory; lot 65, by Draper Hall; and lot 64, by Dickinson Hall, Kunieczny said.

Family link in the works

By SUE MILLER
Collegian Correspondent

A new program, now in the research stage at the University of Massachusetts, would link people with similar family-related problems into support groups across the state, according to an assistant professor of home economics.

The Center for the Family will be a state-wide clearing house for all family needs, said Warren Schumacher, assistant professor of home economics and extension specialist in human development.

Linking people to support groups and people with similar problems will "help people run their families more effectively," he said.

The center is now working on research to determine the effectiveness of support of families in the areas of transitions, divorce and separation, death and dying, children in need of services, and adoption and foster families.

The center is researching the effects these issues have in relation to people gaining control over their own lives and in gaining self-esteem. If support is proven effective in these areas, it will help prove the effectiveness of a state-wide program, Schumacher said.

The linking system will consist of a toll-free telephone number and computers in each Massachusetts state county. A central computer, temporarily located in Skinner Hall, will link the county computers, he said.

To develop this program, the center is asking for $45,000 in the next year.

"We have eight proposals out there now, all private funds," Schumacher said. "The statehouse in Boston says it would be a good idea if it could be proven to work."

Attacking the students' interests

Everybody says they're for student rights. It's like being against nuclear war or drunk driving. Reasonable people can't disagree.

Recently, however, a group claiming to champion "student rights" has been attempting to defund two of the most effective and successful student organizations around, MassPIRG and SSAM.

They claim that these groups do not fairly represent UMass student interests.

The facts suggest otherwise. Both SSAM and PIRG have advocated and lobbied for issues of profound concern to students. They have fought back tuition increases, won financial aid battles on the state and federal level, successfully spearheaded a drive to place a student on the Board of Regents, fought for the passage of acid rain and toxic waste site clean-up bills and pushed for simplified voter registration procedures.

We feel this is precisely why students on the extreme right want to silence them — because they effectively represent students on issues with which the extremists disagree.

Although they are students themselves,this ultra-conservative element can afford to weaken their fellow students' influence because their effectiveness has little to do with their ability to organize their peers. Their funding base is secure. They receive money and logistical support — for the radical right "Minutemen" newspaper, for example — from right-wing corporations and foundations based in New York and Washington D.C.

Student rights for them, it seems, means the right for UMass students to be used by highly organized ideological extremists with a national agenda. We do not begrudge them this right. If they want to claim to represent students by attempting to weaken student empowerment, by attacking other groups, and by trying to divide the student community, that is their prerogative.

We feel there are better ways to further the interests of both students and the society in which we live.

Holy cows, other misconceptions

We are compelled to write solely for the cause of edification.

- Hindus do not beleive a cow is holy nor do they believe a virgin can conceive and bear a son and call him Emanuel (Jews don't even believe in this).
- Many hindus do not eat flesh, neither cow, pig, dog, cat, maggots, nor grasshoppers.
- We must say, however, the chemistry department is indeed happy to have his diversion.

Vote 'no,' but notice . . .

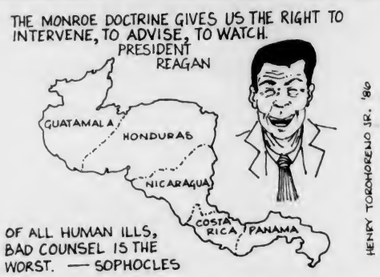
Two things should be done regarding the optional student fee used to fund the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group and the State Student Association of Massachusetts. First, students should vote "no" on the refendum today or tomorrow -- we should not abolish the fees, which support two groups that look out for students' interests. But then these groups and the administration should arrange for the fees to be a positive rather than a negative checkoff on each semester's tuition bills.

MassPIRG, the UMass version of a nationwide network of PIRGs based mostly at universities, is a lobbying group focusing on the environment, education, voter registration and other issues. SSAM comprises representatives from the state's 28 public college campuses who lobby the state and federal governments for higher education funding.

Both have been called too "political" to have their money channeled through Whitmore as a general student fee. But if they oppose Reagan administration policies, it is because those policies have gutted aid to colleges and college students. For anyone seeking affordable quality learning, it is well worth paying $3 per semester -- $2 to MassPIRG and $1 to SSAM -- to try to mend the fiscal battering education has suffered in the past five years.

However, the $3 charge should not remain an automatic "optional" fee, to be levied unless a student actively rejects it. Instead, it should appear on the bill as a box to be checked off by all who are willing to add $3 to their tuition payments. The wording with the positive checkoff could be worked out by MassPIRG, SSAM and administrators.

We expect MassPIRG and SSAM will not like this idea. At least initially, it would lead to a drop in their funding. It would place more of a burden on them to tell us why they should be supported. But it would lay to rest charges that they are being funded deceitfully. The fact that MassPIRG and SSAM were able to gather 3,000 pledges of support within two days last week shows the depth of student confidence in their efforts.



SPD's own deception

The campus group calling itself "Students for Participatory Democracy," by its own admission, has committed the ultimate in hypocrisy. While attacking the optional student fee used to fund the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group and the State Student Association of Massachusetts as deceptive, SPD has sought to deceive voters by telling them the wrong way to vote on the referendum tomorrow and Thursday.

MassPIRG supporters have printed flyers reading, "Save MassPIRG -- Vote No." This is correct. To save MassPIRG, students should vote NOT to abolish the $3 fee that appears on all students' tuition bills.

SPD members attempted to tell us otherwise by printing their own version of the flyers: "Save MassPIRG -- Vote Yes." For a group claiming to support an aware, informed student body, it is absurd and inexcusable.

A columnist's repentance

Rusty Denton

There are probably those among the readership of the Collegian who imagine that the calling of a fundamentalist is to spread abuse, insult, and condemnation in the name of Jesus. I wouldn't know; ecclesiastically speaking, I'm not a fundamentalist. But I do know that's not my purpose, so I have some apologies to make.

First, I'd like to apologize to the Indian students on campus. Last week I wrote in this column that it was against the laws and religion of India to kill cows, rats, mice, etc. That was based on Robert L. Sussone's "Handbook on Population," pp. 53, 54, formerly "Report to the California Legislature at the Request of the Senate Majority Leader." It was midnight, I was under a deadline, and didn't confirm it. I have since been informed that I was in error, that diseased cows are sometimes killed, and that there are bounties on vermin. Please forgive me; it was not my intention to spread misinformation about India.

Secondly, last semester I gave an erroneous figure on federal support on AIDS research. That was the result of poor homework on my part. I was chagrined; my effort has been to state opinions, not to invent "facts."

Those are the only errors I know of, but as long as I'm settling accounts, I'll apologize for my irrascible style. Being a cynical, opinionated sort, I have made comments that could be taken as personal insults. I repent.

There are probably many more people who feel offended by the opinions voiced in this column, or who feel that even if it is biblical, it is "unchristian" to say it. I felt that way once, but I've come to realize that most Americans read the Bible through cultural glasses. It reminds me of a Bloom County comic strip sometime back where Binkley is complaining to Oliver Wendell Jones that Prince Charles and Lady Di are too polite, too proper, too . . . too much of something. "Too white," says O.W. Jones. "That's it!" cries Binkley.

I don't know about the royal couple, but I know that American Christianity is just "too white," too pasteurized and homogenized, too proper. Christianity, we think, is supposed to be "nice." People forget that John the Baptist ate insects, that the apostles were rowdy and uncouth, and that the Hebrew prophet Isaiah went naked and barefoot for three years to make a point.

Somehow, I can't imagine the righteous figures of the Bible talking about the mutual encouragement of the realization of personal goals and lifestyles through evaluating role models and how they impacted their environments contingent upon discovery and actualization within the educational process, et cetera, et cetera.

No, the biblical pattern is to talk about issues in blunt, pithy language. I believe we should all do the same. In particular, I think we need to acknowledge in plain-spoken English that this country has problems for which we are all responsible-- problems such as broken families, absentee fathers, murder in the womb, racial disparity, battered children and wives, rape, murder, extortion, excessive profits, inadequate wages, war with God, unbridled sensuality, pornography, drug abuse, political deceit, spineless leadership, injustice, and so on. Plaster smiles and blame-mongering and $10 words won't cut it. True sorrow and mending of ways will. That's called (collective) repentance. We need it if this nation is to survive the current trends.

Unfortunately, repentance for being wrong is not a very "white" concept, so some people may find it offensive. For that I can't apologize.

Rusty Denton is a Collegian columnist.

Letters
Getting the facts straight on India

We were shocked at the gross inaccuracies in Rusty Denton's column "Those Righteous Protectors" in the Collegian of Feb. 4. We refer specifically to the paragraph on animal rights in India.

The autnor states that India has laws prohibiting the killing of rats, mice and "sacred cows." There are in fact no such laws and quite on the contrary, serious pest control measures are used to check the menace of harmful rodents. The vast majority of Indians, whose religion is Hinduism, do not eat beef. Nevertheless, cattle slaughter is very much legal, since India is a secular state and its laws do not favor any religion or sect.

The only correct statement made in the article is that hunger is not India's problem very true considering India is a food exporting country and is even forced to destroy excess food stock periodically. Improperly researched articles like this one serve only to misinform readers and create unnecessary misconceptions.

Lefties face discrimination daily

UMass has started much needed repairs to classrooms and lecture halls. Although a seemingly easy task to accomplish, the typical UMass architectural shortcomings have appeared. And, though not as serious as the library plaza that no one can use or the only Campus Center with indoor rain, this matter deserves immediate attention.

While attending my calculus class, I was surprised to find that the auditorium (Engineering East 131) had been painted and new desks and chairs installed. And, I was amazed to find that among the 400 or so new seats, not one was equipped for left handed student. I understand that the majority of students are right-handed, but statistics show that in a large sample of students such as in this lecture hall, a certain percentage will be left-handed. UMass tries to solve this problem by placing a small table and wooden bench in the rear of the hall. This is totally unacceptable.

Left-handed students pay exactly the same tuition as right-handed ones and I find it very discriminating to be banished to the back of a hall where it is difficult to hear and impossible to see (especially important for a subject like calculus). I am not asking that all lecture halls have an even number of left-handed and right-handed seats, simply that a row of leftie chairs be installed on the outside aisle or make one of the smaller side rows for lefties.

UMass prides itself on educating us to avoid discrimination, yet this practice is academic discrimination against left-handed students and phone calls to the SGA, Academic Affairs Office, Scheduling Office, and CASIAC were in vain. So, lefties unite and stand up for our equal rights in the classroom. LEFT ON.

Interim gov't in Haiti promises democracy

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The head of the interim government pledged yesterday to share wealth fairly in Haiti, whose people were ground into poverty during three decades that made the Duvaliers and their friends fabuously rich.

Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, president of the six-man interim government council, said at swearing-in ceremonies for the new Cabinet that there will be free elections by universal suffrage and a new, "liberal" constitution to create a "real and working democracy." He did not set a date for the elections or elaborate on the new constitution.

Haiti's last free election was the one that brought Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier to power in 1957. He later declared himself president-for-life. His son Jean-Claude, who succeeded at age 19 when "Papa Doc" died in 1971, fled with his family and aides Friday in a U.S. military plane and now is in France.

The remarks by Namphy, who is the army chief of staff, followed a weekend orgy of celebration and violence. Haitians rioted, sacked homes owned by the departed dictator and his lieutenants, and hunted down members of the dreaded Duvalier private militia, the Tonton Macoute.

As many as 300 people were killed over the weekend, including members of the Tonton Macoute who were hacked and beaten to death.

"Macoute hunts," as they were called here, have been conducted in poor neighborhoods by army patrols with civilian guides. Soldiers with automatic weapons moved through rows of hovels kicking aside chickens and scrawny dogs.

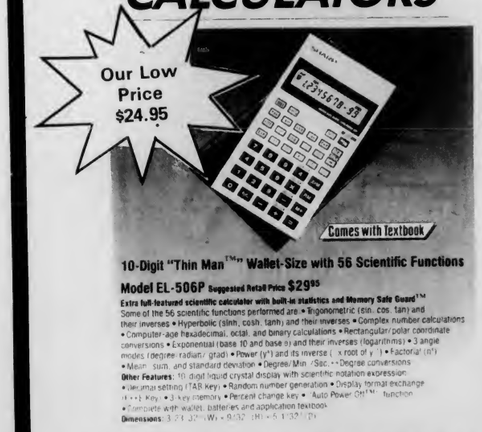
"The Philadelphia events are the extralegal violence which inevitably results from the so-called legal assaults on all minorities by Reagan," Gaslin said.

John Ruddock, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, said he hoped "disgust for this social disease [racism]" would be triggered at the demonstration.

March organizer Bill Roundtree said he knows of 50 buses that are scheduled to arrive from 30 cities, as well as cars and vans expected from colleges in the northeast, including Yale, Dartmouth, Cornell, University of New Hampshire and the State University of New York campuses at Albany, Syracuse, and New Paltz.

All the organizers are veterans of many marches and though they don't expect any problems from racist groups, they are fully prepared, Roundtree said in a telephone interview.



"We have enough security," he said.

"Every single major organization in the city has endorsed the march," he said, "We expect it to be militant and spirited."

The Radical Student Union is planning to drive three vans to Philadelphia, leaving Amherst at 11:30 p.m. Friday and returning around midnight Saturday. Last night, some spots were still available. Those interested can call 545-0677.

Supporters of the march include: Reps. George Crockett and John Conyers, former US Attorney General Ramsey Clark, the All-Peoples Congress and the African National Congress.

UMass Critical Art Review:
an art community publication

By JENNIFER ACKERMAN
Collegian Staff

Here at UMass, we have a unique sense of community, not only because of the quantity of students, but also the quality. We really are a subcommunity existing in the Amherst area. We have our own government, news publications (representing various perspectives), credit union, zip code, restaurants, businesses, not excluding an infinite number of clubs and organizations.

The university's Art community is one of the more progressive and vocal in the area, but the sheer size of UMass can isolate artists (visual, literary, as well as performing) from the community--and from each other.

MFA student, Dave Fish, keenly felt a need to provide a forum for artists in the area. He has, with the aid of the Arts Council, initiated a new publication that is impeccably designed to be such a forum, coined The UMass Critical Art Review. In a recent interview, Fish discussed his ideas for the forthcoming publication:

Collegian: Why another UMass Art publication? What needs will The UMass Critical Art Review meet for area artists?

David Fish: "There are a lot of events springing up that need comprehensive coverage, such as student or student group exhibits. Our coverage will be unique because the principle responsibility will go to students. It will forge a link between two diciplines; giving practical experience to Art History and Journalism students, and at the same time giving recognition or an audience to Fine artists. It will be unique by providing an active forum for artists, a chance to comingle. It will create a symbiotic relationship between the different diciplines in the Art program."

C: How will The UMass Critical Art Review be structurally organized?

DF: "It is a hierarchical structure, consiting of an editorial staff: the Editor in Chief, a Political editor, a Fine Arts editor, and a News editor, also a production staff, and the reporters. The separation of Politics and Fine Arts reflects the dual function of the student artist, since art can be a vehicle for political ideas. The Political editor will deal with this type of event separately. The Fine Arts editor will be dealing with the quality of the selection of critisism."

C: What will be the focus of your Political editor?

DF: "Mostly issues involving our community; administrative policies, the placement and selection of public artwork, the development of agencies, i.e. the Arts Council. Also, controversial issues--decisions that effect the Art community, from national down to local. We want to keep in mind a global perspective in the context of the contemporary scene as a whole, such as in New York and Boston."

C: What do you see for the future, in terms of this publication?

DF: "I see it as playing a role in the academic programs of Art students here by providing a forum for Fine Artists and Art historians...and Journalism students to contribute to the literary pool of the country--an avenue to explore outside this community from an informed perspective."

The UMass Critical Art Review is going to be a real stepping stone for those who are involved in its publication, and an undeniable asset to the local artists needing recognition. If you are interested in becoming involved in this project, contact David Fish at the Munson Annex, UMass. This is something to really sit on the edge of your seat to wait for. Look for it sometime after Spring Break.

Exclusive Interview with INXS

By NATALIE HEWITT
Collegian Correspondent

For the first time since their first American tour with Adam Ant, INXS played at a university when they opened the second leg of their North American tour Friday night at the UMass Student Union Ballroom. On the phone from New York City the day before, Kirk Pengilly (guitar, saxophone, vocals) exclaimed that "I'm looking forward to it really. They're always lots fun!"

The Australian band, formed in 1977, got their name from the fact that they are a six-member band, an unusually large size for a band nowadays. With so many band members, there could easily be problems with communication and clashes with egos. As Pengilly explains, with half of the members consisting of the Farriss brothers, Andrew (keyboards), Tim (guitar), and Jon (drums), there are few problems with egos. The problem can sometimes be communication. "As far as communication goes, because we've got days off (in New York City), and we're not necessarily doing anything, everyone just sort of shoots off in all different directions." Because they all grew up together in "normal middle-class" Australia, and they are constantly together as a band, often, there are few problems with communication. "A lot of things, we don't need to communicate about these days," Pengilly continues, "because we've all known each other for so long, we've been playing together for so long that certain things go without having to be said. And not that it happens very often, but if anyone should have an argument or something, it's kind of like, you know, family where you can walk out the door and it can be forgotten, and you can go out and have dinner or whatever. It's a really strong sort of unit that way. There's obviously problems sometimes with knowing each other so well, I guess." Searching for an analogy, he says, "It's almost like a marriage," Pengilly laughs at an associated thought. "I'm married to five people -- I'm a bigamist!"

INXS' music seems to defy definition because the band constantly changes their sound, always experimenting. Pengilly sees this as the reason why their singles here in the U.S. have not made it the Top 10. "We've made it sort of difficult on ourselves because we keep changing our music styles. I don't think too drastically, but enough to perhaps confuse people to whether it's the same band or not!" He laughs. Pengilly sees the size of the U.S. as a determining factor in their success here. "It takes a long time, for a start, to get to the gigantic population of the U.S. You're competing against hundreds and hundreds of bands and airplay time and things. It can either be something where you're there at the right time and you can have immediate success or it can take a while for people to get to sort of know you and appreciate."

Most of the songs INXS played are social commentaries -- "Biting Bullets" from their new album, Listen Like Thieves, is an example. Pengilly wrote the music and lead singer Michael Hutchence wrote the words. "It's an anti-heroin song. It's about some friends of Michael's," Pengilly explains. "I'm totally opposed to heroin or cocaine and anything that can really stuff you up. But I don't see anything wrong with alcohol or anything in moderation," he adds. The band is very involved with benefit concerts for organizations such as Greenpeace and many nuclear disarmament functions, although they don't like to be too political in their music for fear of "ramming it down people's throats." But, as Pengilly continues, "with Greenpeace and a lot of rallies and that that go on that obviously being held to try and benefit the world, to make the world last longer -- I'll put it that way, we'll do anything that's ever asked of us as far as performances and things go to raise money for a cause." They are well aware of their power as musicians and they see that as beneficial to raising money for these causes.

With all of their success everywhere else, INXS would like the U.S. to get "first and foremost, entertainment" out of their music. But they also want the States to see their abilities and uniqueness as a band. Pengilly explains, "I would like to hope that the band, in the public's eyes, sort of matters as a band, and that basically, people will keep enjoying our music, really."

Five bodies found mutilated

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police said yesterday they found the bodies of five blacks who were bound, stabbed and burned with what has become known as the "necklace" - gasoline-soaked tires placed around them and set afire.

The killings appeared to be part of the struggle between rival anti-apartheid groups that differ on how to fight white-minority rule.

Four of the bodies were found together, with more tires piled on them to form a funeral pyre, and the fifth was a short distance away. Press reports said the men may have been sentenced to death by unofficial "people's courts" operating in black townships.

Col. Gerrie van Rooyen, police spokesman for the eastern region that includes Cape Province, said the victims were stabbed, their hands and feet bound with thin wire, then gasoline-soaked tires were placed around their bodies and set alight. The corpses were found on a street in a section of New Brighton township, outside the industrial center of Port Elizabeth.

He said the men probably were killed Sunday.

Their deaths brought the weekend toll from black infighting to seven.

Besutu Ntsheta, a leader of a small group called Azanian National Youth Unity, said attackers beat and hacked two of its members to death Saturday and abducted several others. His organization believes only blacks should fight for black rights.

Ntsheta said he did not know whether the victims found yesterday were among those kidnapped. Police said they had not identified the men.

Stockbridge basketball wins thriller in OT over Greenfield Community College, 92-82

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

In the many years Jack Leaman has coached basketball, he never went to double overtime, but the former University of Massachusetts mentor broke that record last week, leading his Stockbridge School of Agriculture team to an exciting 92-82 victory over Greenfield Community College.

The Aggies were led by senior guard Mike Luciano who scored 13 of his game-high 21 points in the overtime periods.

"It was a great game, both to watch and play in," said Leaman, who coached NBA great Julius Erving when the two played for UMass in the early 70's.

Stockbridge led by four points with 17 seconds to go before Greenfield scored and turned an Aggie turnover into the game-tying points that put the game into first overtime tied at 72.

Stockbridge missed the last shot in the first overtime, sending the game into its second five-minute OT tied at 77.

In the second extra period, Luciano and the Aggies went all outscoring Greenfield 15-5.

Five players hit double figures for Leaman and the Aggies 6-3 on the season. Freshman guard Jim Reinertson came off the bench for Luciano in the first half and hit eight shots in a row. He finished with 18 points.

Freshman forward Tom Lingenberg added 15 as did Mark Cullen.

Pat Alberini chipped in with 11.

Stockbridge, which also offers soccer among its athletics, led 42-36 at halftime before Greenfield stormed back to tie the game.

"It was nice to see play so well in the second overtime," said Leaman, who also coaches varsity golf for UMass (both men and women).

"Mike did a great job late in the game for us and we had a lot of contribution from our bench. Especially Reinertson. He played a super game."

Stockbridge will be in action again at home (they play their home games in the Curry Hicks Cage) against Holyoke Community College on Wednesday, February 19 at 7 p.m.

"I can't take too many more of these barnburners," said Leaman with a laugh. "But at least we were on the winning side."

UMass forms racquetball team

The next club sport team for the University of Massachusetts? Racquetball.

The Amherst Racquet and Fitness Center is interested in forming an intercollegiate team out of the university and is looking for players.

There are currently six colleges in New England that compete in the sport with the the Intercollegiate Nationals being held in Rhode Island in April.

There will be two meetings for interested players. The first will be today at 2 p.m. and the second Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Center, which is located on Route 116 in Sunderland (on a bus route). Anyone interested in playing should contact the club in they are unable to attend the meeting.

At least four men and four women are needed to compete, but the team can carry up to 16 players. Lin Wetherby and Roz Olson are organizing and coaching the teams. Both are among the two best female semi-pro players in New England and play out at the center.

Minutemen cage Lions, 56-52

Brown's late heroics pace UMass

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Two good things came out of last night's 56-52 victory by the University of Massachusetts basketball team over Penn State.

The first being that the Minutemen proved they could win two games in-a-row.

The second is that UMass seems to have developed into a good team, for good teams have the ability to play poorly but still win.

Freshman David Brown scored six of his eight points in the gem's final two minutes, waking up the 3,677 on hand at the Curry Hicks Cage and putting a halt to a Penn State comeback that saw the Nittany Lions claw back from an 11-point deficit to tie the game at 48 with 2:28 to go.

The Minutemen, who returned home after a four-game road trip, are now 8-14, 5-8 in the Atlantic 10. They are 7-4 at home this season and now start preparation to host Rutgers in the Cage on Thursday night.

"I'm happy we won, but not happy with the way we won, you can bet we'll work some tails in practice before Rutgers," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "We didn't play with any intensity out there and almost let it get away from us. We just kind of slept throughout the game."

The Minutemen were led by sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton with 13. Freshman guard Mike Mundy came off the pines to register his best effort of the season, scoring 12 points on four-of-six shooting in a solid 13 minutes. Freshman forward Duane Chase added nine with freshman center Johyn Milum scoring seven and getting five rebounds. Brown led the game with eight boards..

The game was in the high school junior varsity mold. UMass would rush its shots (they were 18-of-46 from the floor) while the Lions were content to hold the ball and take the crowd out of the game. A mere five players scored for PSU, led by 6-2 junior guard Paul Murphy with a career-high 23.

"I'm proud of my kids, they hung in there against a talented team in a tough place to play," said State coach Bruce Parkhill, who dressed only 10 players and started a walk-on. "They were just too tough for us at the end."

With the score tied at 48 thanks to a Murphy 20-footer from the baseline with 2:28 to go, Brown took over.

The consistent 6-4 swingman from Baltimore grabbed a Sutton airball under the hoop and went up strong, hitting the layup and being fouled by Brian Allen with 1:40 left.

He canned the free throw to make it 51-48. Murphy answered with a one-handed leaner from the lane with 1:12 to go. Brown then calmly sank a clutch 15-footer from the baseline and it was 53-50 with 30 seconds left. That hoop proved to be the winner.

Ware product Carl Chrabascz missed his shot during PSU's next possession and went over Brown's back for the rebound. Beatle made the front end of his one-and-one with 11 seconds left and UMass led, 54-50.

The Minutemen let Murphy cruise in for the unmolested dunk with four seconds left and Parkhill quickly called timeout.

UM junior co-captain Carl Smith inbounded the ball to Sutton who stood still for three seconds before being hacked by Murphy with a second to go. He made both his foul shots and the Minutemen came away with the ugly win.

Minuteman Mutterings: Freshman forward Joe Fennell has been suspended indefinitely from the team for what Gerlufsen called "problems on and off the court." The coach said he "had to draw the line" with the 6-6 New Yorker and said no timetable had been set for his comeback this season. . .Smith, with 8 assists, needs only 24 assists to tie the UM career record of 518 set by the late Alex Eldridge. . .The season series with PSU is now 7-5 in favor of the Lions. . .Gerlufsen is 4-2 against Parkhill. . .the UMass Minutes performed at halftime in their eye-catching white outfits. . .two junior teams also competed at halftime, making the intermission 20 minutes long. . .Signs in the Crowd: Milum's Asylum, It's Muddy Time and Milum Mania. Sutton has been in double figures for 13 straight games and 21-of-22 contests. . .Penn State is now 4-11 in the A-10 and 10-14 overall, losers of four straight.

UMass (56): Lorenzo Sutton 5-11 3-3 13, Mike Mundy 4-6 4-4 12, Duane Chase 4-7 1-2 9, David Brown 3-6 2-3 8, Carl Smith 2-7 3-3 7, Jonn Milum 0-7 7-7 7, Tom Emerson 0-2 0-0 0, Sean Mosby 0-0 0-0 0. Totals:18-46 20-23 56.

Penn State (52): Paul Murphy 10-15 3-4 23, Jim Newcomer 3-5 5-6 11, Mike Peapos 3-8 0-0 6, Carl Chrabascz 2-5 1-2 5, Wes Jones 2-4 0-0 4, Brian Allen 1-4 1-2 3, Christian Appleman 0-0 0-0 0, Paul Madison 0-0 0-0 0 Bruce Blake 0-1 0-0 0. Totals: 21-42 10-14 52

UMass (8-14) ..... 30 26 - 56
Penn State (10-14) ..... 21 31 - 52

Fouled Out: None. Total Fouls: UMass - 15, Penn State 18. Rebounds: UMass - 26 (Brown - 7) Penn State - 30 (Jones 6). Assists: UMass - 9 (Smith 8), Penn State - 14 (Allen 9). Technical Fouls: None. Attendance: 3,677.

UM women on road

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team travels to Washington, D.C. today to face George Washington University in an Atlantic 10 Conference matchup.

UMass is 9-12 overall this season, 2-8 in the league and will be looking for a confidence-building victory following seven straight losses in the conference.

The Colonials are 11-9 overall, but are also struggling in the league with a 3-7 mark.

The wounded Minutewomen, still smarting from Saturday's loss at the hands of St. Josephs University, will look to neutralize GW's proficient perimeter shooting game and try will try to exhibit the same patient offense shown against the Lady Hawks that enabled them to shoot 49 percent from the floor.

UMass senior guard Barbara Hebel will be looking to move into second place on the carrer scoring list. The 5-9 Houston native needs just eight points to pass Julie Ready (1979-81). Hebel, coming off a season high 23 point performance against St. Joe's, currently has 1,399 career points. She has also led the Minutewomen in game high scoring eight times this season, including the last five games.

Freshman point guard Christel Zullo needs only two assists to become only the fifth UMass player ever to eclipse the 100 assist plateau in a single season, and the first freshman ever to accomplish that feat. Zullo is averaging 4.7 assists per game.

The injury update still looks bleak for UMass. Sophomore center Sue Burtoft will not dress for tonight's game and may be out for the rest of the season as a result of a hand injury. Burtoft joins sophomore center Tara Lewis in the out-for-the-season catagory, as Lewis will sit out the remainder of the season with a knee injury. On a positive note, senior forward Kelly Collins has returned to the UMass lineup after suffering a knee injury earlier in the season.

The Minutewomen will return home for two games against Temple University on Friday and the University of Rhode Island a week from today.

UMass ski teams retain first place

By KARA MULLEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams retained their hold on first place in the Eastern College Ski Conference after this weekend's action.

The men won Saturday's giant slalom by a three-second margin over Boston College and Plymouth State. The race, held at New Hampshire's Loon Mountain and sponsored by Brown University, saw UM's Craig McCordic take third with Bill davidson grabbing fourth.

The women held two single-run giant slalom races on Saturday to make for a cancelled race scheduled at Waterville Valley. The UMass women won the first race, defeating Boston College. Sandy Stripp was second for UMass in the individual standings. Kathy Smiley was fourth and Alice Gigliotti was sixth.

In the second race, the UMass women were upset by Boston College and took second. This was UM's first defeat of the season. Gigliotti was third and Stripp fourth with Smiley fifth. Their times however couldn't make up the .8 of a second the Eagles won by.

The UMass men, in action on Sunday at Tenney Mountian in the slalom, defeated Boston College by eight seconds and third-place Central Connecticut by 16 seconds.

The men were led by McCordic with a 48.47. davidson was fourth followed by Marc Denis in seventh.

In addition, Tim Flannery was 10th and Dan Baxter came in 14th.

On Sunday, the women took another victory, led by Stripp with a first place. Gigliotti was fifth overall with Smiley taking a strong sixth place. UMass turned the tables on BC, handing the Eagles a defeat by less than a second.

The men's league includes Brown, Amherst, Connecticut, Trinity, Boston College and Plymouth State.

The women race against Brown, Amherst, Smith College, Boston College, Mount Holyoke and Plymouth State.

This coming weekend will see the men and women race in their final regular season race of the season at Berkshire East against the league teams.

The women are expected to be pushed by Boston College, the second place team. The men will be challenged by the Eagles as well, who is also second in the men's division.

The Division 1 Championships will be held weekend of the 22nd at Middlebury College in Vermont at the Middlebury College Snow Bowl.

UMass will go against such top teams as Vermont, Middlebury and Dartmouth. Some of the top collegiate skiiers in the eastern region will be there. UMass will compete in both the giant slalom and slalom events at the meet.

UMass Schedule:
Today:
Women's Basketball: at George Washington, 7:30 p.m.
Women's Swimming: at Mt. Holyoke, 7 p.m.

Vote on PIRG, SSAM today and tomorrow

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Polls will be open today and tomorrow for students to vote on whether they want to continue funding two student advocacy groups by including a $3 fee on each semester's tuition bill.

The referendum asks students to vote yes or no on the question, "Should the following be removed from your semester bill: Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM)?"

The results of the vote are not binding, said Karen Morvay, chairwoman of the Undergraduate Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

"It doesn't have to be binding because it wasn't made as an official motion. It's more like an advisory motion; anyone can take the results and do with them what they want," she said.

The referendum was initiated by Students for Participatory Democracy, a 20-member group which opposes the way the fee is collected.

The fees—$2 for MassPIRG and $1 for SSAM—are automatically included on students' tuition bills. Those who do not wish to pay the fees must fill out the waiver on their bill and subtract the fee from the total tuition.

The wording of the referendum has been criticized by members of MassPIRG and SSAM for being confusing.

"I think it is misleading," said Rayna Sargent, of MassPIRG. "The natural train of thought if you're in support of something is to vote yes. Students who want to support MassPIRG need to vote no.

"And the wording makes no reference to the fee being waivable," she said.

Meanwhile, charges and countercharges continue to fly over both sides' campaign tactics.

Earlier this week, SPD members Tony Rudy and Brian Darling admitted to hanging up campaign posters which were similar to those of MassPIRG and SSAM. The altered posters asked students to, "save MassPIRG, vote yes."

Darling claimed he and Rudy were, "neutralizing their (MassPIRG's) deceptive advertising."

Michael Ferrigno, the executive director of SSAM, yesterday charged that SPD members misrepresented themselves to students.

"We have witnesses who saw people from Students for Participatory Democracy who were telling people they were from SSAM and to vote yes (against SSAM and MassPIRG)," Ferrigno said.

Jim Shaw, a UMass alumnus and supporter of SSAM, said he was one of the witnesses.

Last night Darling said, "I can't verify whether somebody did say that or not." He then countered, "We have pictures of MassPIRGers pulling down our posters."

Sargent admitted MassPIRG took down four posters, but said they were altered ones to be shown to the Collegian and the student attorney general as evidence.

VOTING INFO

The referendum reads: "Should the following be removed from your semester bill: Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM)?"

MassPIRG and SSAM support a "NO" vote, which would preserve their current method of funding.

Students for Participatory Democracy wants a "YES" vote, to abolish this funding.

Polling places today and tomorrow:

Tougher admissions policy next year

By ANITA L. ROYE
Collegian Staff

Eighteen-thousand first-year students applying to the University of Massachusetts for the 1987-88 school year are going to find admission requirements tougher than past classes have.

An admissions policy passed by the Board of Regents of Higher Education in 1984, which is gradually being phased in, requires high school seniors in Massachusetts to pass certain college preparatory courses for admission to state colleges and universities.

The policy utilizes an "admissions eligibility index," which relates class rank and Scholastic Aptitude Test scores, to set the minimum standards. Class ranks are weighted, taking into account both the student's performance and the quality of the high school.

For a university, for example, a student in the top 20 percent of his or her class would need a combined SAT score—verbal and math—of 1,100. A student whose weighted rank is only in the top 50 percent would need a combined SAT score of 850. For a state college, a weighted class rank of 65 percent along with a combined SAT score of 850 would satisfy the requirements, according to a pamphlet published by the Board of Regents.

The board plans to phase in the policy over the next few years to allow high schools the time to adjust to the new requirements, according to the pamphlet.

Along with the mandatory standards, there are also several exemption categories, such as taking three years off between high school and college, being educationally disadvantaged because of low income, limited English proficiency, or racial discrimination.

Timm Rinehart, director of undergraduate admissions at UMass, said, "Even if a student meets the minimum requirements (as determined by the index) it's still not a guarantee of admission." Rinehart added that UMass' minimum first-year student requirements are above those recommended by the policy.

Rinehart said this policy will prove valuable since it will "force high schools to improve their curriculum."

Rinehart expects 18,000 applications for next fall's freshman class, with only 4,000 spots available. He said the policy will allow UMass to "be more selective at the entry level."

Stockwell rips CIA

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

Young people in America should take action to stop the "politics of paranoia" leading the U.S. into war in Central America, and, ultimately, the end of the world, said a former CIA official last night.

"You can't wait until you graduate next summer, because there might not be a world when you graduate next summmer," said John Stockwell, the highest-ranking official yet to speak out against the agency.

Stockwell addressed about 600 people in the Campus Center Auditorium last night, while more than 100 others, who couldn't get in, watched on monitors outside the auditorium.

He said the easiest human emotion to stir up is the nationalistic competitive feeling epitomized in movies like "Rambo" and "Red Dawn."

"It's fun, and for politicians, it's dynamite," Stockwell said. "Now, we're being conditioned to support a military action against Nicaragua."

The Sandanista government, which overthrew the Anastasio Somoza regime in 1979, was not originally hostile to the U.S., he said.

"There is every reason to believe that, in a short while, if we had worked with them patiently, they would have come to see us as nice people," he said. "Instead of working with them patiently, we launched a propoganda campaign against them.

Shcharansky freed after nine years

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP)—Anatoly Shcharansky, the Soviet human rights activist imprisoned for nine years as a spy, was freed on a snowy Berlin bridge yesterday and flown to a tumultuous, emotional welcome in Isreal.

The 38-year-old Jewish dissident had become known as the "prisoner of Zion," a focus for international Jewry and symbol of Jews who are not allowed to leave the Soviet Union.

Also included in the East-West prisoner exchange on Berlin's Glienicke Bridge were five people held in the West on spy charges and three held in the East.

Shcharansky was freed first, apart from the others, to emphasize the U.S. insistence that he was not a spy. He was arrested in 1977 and a Soviet courte convicted him of spying for the CIA, sentencing him in 1978 to 13 years imprisonment.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir embraced Shcharansky as he and his wife Avital, who met him in Frankfurt, stepped from the Israeli executive jet at Ben-Gurion Airport. The ceremony was broadcast five on radio and television.

"How are you?" Peres asked.

"Everything is okay,"Shcharansky said. They spoke in Hebrew.

Shcharansky clasped his hands above his head in victory, then held hands with his wife as she introduced him to Cabinet members, helping him with his Hebrew. For more than a decade she has lived in Israel and campaigned for his freedom.

About 3,000 people who gathered outside the terminal building cheered and waved as the Shcharanskys and Peres went inside to telephone President Reagan.

"We thanked him for his tireless efforts out of a deep feeling for the Jewish people and an inner conviction that the Jewish people deserve to leave the Soviet Union," the prime minister said.

All the beef on the dining commons

By CARYN BOWERS
Collegian Staff

Although they don't advertise, "Over 55 billion served" or "Home of the Whopper," the campus dining commons have most likely gone through enough hamburgers, or "beefsteak special" as the d.c. menu refers to it, to compete with any fast food chain.

Better yet, they don't even have to advertise. And with approximately 11,000 mouths to feed, business is good.

But here's the beef: Franklin dining commons in Central Residential Area uses at least 650 pounds of hamburger for one meal, said Production Manager Brenda Newton. Considering that between 2,000 and 2,500 people pass through the d.c. for dinner daily, and some of the same 2,100 take in lunch there, a typical hamburger meal calls for three pounds of beef per person.

What's more, according to Josephine Keeley, acting director of Food Services, there are more males living in Central, so the number of people requesting second helpings is higher there than in Southwest Residential Area or Worcester Dining Commons.

Newton is responsible for ordering all food and coordinating all food production.

"That's everything from soup to nuts, right down to the croutons on the salad bar,"she said.

Newton's words prove what none of us have wanted to admit all along: That, yes, the d.c. is a carefully planned environment, and nothing that goes on the glass plates—the ones that servers so carefully guard—ends up there by accident.

Ordering is done daily in accordance with menu services, which prepares weekly menus and distributes them to each of the dining commons five weeks in advance. This allows time to make estimations on the amount of food that will be needed.

Supervisors and cooks keep track of how many portions of food are used for each meal. The information is then recorded on a computer and sent to data processing in the Whitmore Administration Building.

That completed, an order sheet is then formed, which tells how much food to order for each meal and recipe specifications, broken down into individual categories.

On an average day, Franklin will go through about 768 quarts of milk, 60 loaves of white bread, 60 dozen eggs (that's 720 individual eggs) and 850 pounds of turkey, a popular delicacy among the clientele.

No matter how you slice it, the d.c. is a major restaurant in its own class.

Ruddock convicted; may appeal

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON—John Ruddock, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, was found guilty by a six-member jury yesterday of wanton destruction of personal property over $100, a misdemeanor, in Hampshire County District court.

Sentencing was postponed.

"I have no comment at this time. We're exploring the possibility of an appeal," said Charles DiMare, Ruddock's attorney and the directing attorney of the University of Massachusetts Legal Services Office.

Ruddock also had no comment.

Ruddock was arrested while calling roll at a student senate meeting last May 7 and was charged with damaging University of Massachusetts Police Officer Dennis Bromery's personal car. Ruddock stated that on May 1, 1985, he hurdled the car to alert police that a bus loaded with handcuffed protestors was leaking gasoline.

He was taking part in a sit-in that day to protest University investments in South Africa. Thirty-two students and one non-student were arrested.

He was released on $50 bail, reduced from $200. The original felony charge of "malicious property damage" was reduced to a misdemeanor last November.

Ruddock's arrest was seen by student leaders last spring as an attempt by the administration to quell campus activism.

At the time of Ruddock's arrest, DiMare said that in the six years he had served as an attorney at the University, he had never seen disciplinary action taken against a student protestor.

Ruddock, at the time of his arrest, said police "could have shown better judgement" by arresting him before the senate meeting instead of at the beginning.

The spring semester of 1985 saw students occupy Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson's office, demanding that the University divest it's holdings with companies doing business in South Africa.

At a pre-trial hearing last November, Ruddock was found not guilty of "malicious property damage."

DiMare appealed the preliminary verdict to a misdemeanor charge of "wanton destruction," because, under the felony charge, Ruddock might have had to pay for the damages to Bromery's vehicle.

DiMare said the appeal was made on behalf of Ruddock because he was maintaining Ruddock's "complete innocence."

Student accused of shoplifting

A 21-year-old female student was arrested at 10:16 a.m. Monday at the University Store and charged with shoplifting, University of Massachusetts police said.

She attempted to leave the store with a pair of gloves, a tee-shirt, a sweatshirt and a pair of sweat pants totaling $79.80. She was stopped by a security officer, police said.

In other police reports:

- A $350 typewriter, a portable sewing machine valued at $150 and a small amount of money was reported stolen at 3:35 p.m. Sunday, from the University Apartments. The items were taken during the third week of November. One of the doors of the apartment was unlocked and footprints were left on a bed, police said.
- Equipment worth about $1,240 was taken at 11:40 a.m. Monday from a construction site on University Drive, Amherst Police said.

The stolen material consisted of Baker staging, cable, two drills, and several 2-by-8 planks, police said. No arrests have been made yet.

Whitmore employee arraigned

A woman was arraigned in Hampshire District Court yesterday after being charged with taking $6,630.88 from the payroll department of the University of Massachusetts, where she worked.

Carlene M. LaFleche, 31, of South Hadley, was released on personal recognizance after being arrainged on charges of larceny over $100.

She allegedly took the money, "over time in a period of about six months starting in late spring 85," said Ed Etheredge, of the Northwestern District Attorney's Office.

A couple of months ago, "someone else in the department discovered her (stealing the money)," and reported her, Etheredge said.

LaFleche was arrested shortly after the theft was discovered.

The maximum sentence for larceny over $100 is two and a half years in the House of Correction and no more than a $600 fine.

The theft was discovered by the University's auditors who noticed a discrepancy in the payroll office funds. The case was investigated for a two month period by Massachusetts State Police, as reported in the Hampshire Gazette.

According to the Hampshire Gazette, a UMass employee in the Bursar's office may have also taken money. The incident is under investigation and is unrelated to the first.

Companeras means "good friend" in Spanish, which is exactly what the Womanshelter Companeras of Holyoke serves as.

The shelter, established in December of 1980 as a bilingual, bicultural shelter for battered women, is a very necessary facility, according to Maria Zavala, counselor advocate for the shelter.

"We provide emergency shelter for women and their children," Zavala said. A stay at the house can last from a couple of nights to a maximum of six weeks.

The house creates "a supportive atmosphere that is helpful for women," Zavala said in a recent interview. She said the women that come to the Womanshelter experience feelings of "incredible relief."

The shelter provides emergency housing and help programs to any woman who seeks them. Sue, a spokesperson for the shelter who didn't want her last name used, said that there was no "typical" user of the facility—the ages of the women varied from 18 to 75. Some have no dinistas' fault," he said. The Sandinistas "have never yet committed an act of war against us, but we have been bedeviling them for five years."

He cited the eight U.S. military bases in Honduras and rehearsals for an invasion of Nicaragua as proof that the U.S. is planning to go to war.

He said U.S.-trained contra rebels commit atrocities like murdering parents in front of their children, while Reagan calls them, "the moral equivalent of our founding fathers.

"All I can say is, maybe his founding fathers, but I hope to hell not my own," said Stockwell, who worked for the CIA for 13 years.

"We can't keep on doing it this way because of these 52,000, soon to be 70,000 or 80,000 nuclear weapons," he said. "We now have machines with the authority to end all humanity."

Stockwell repeatedly told the audience to read books documenting CIA covert actions, but admitted, "we're not a nation of readers."

Hope may lie in the fact that "the leaders realize that they're going to be vaporized," he said. Also, "if the young people rose up today...it would eventually have the same effect [as in the 1960's]" he said.

While working for the agency, Stockwell was assigned to Africa, Vietnam, and eventually appointed commander of the Angola task force. He resigned in 1977 because, he said he found, "there was no sense of honor, or integrity or commitment to intelligence," in the agency.

children, others have many. They represent all income levels, ranging from the unemployed to highly-paid working professionals.

Leslie Baker, the volunteer student coordinator of Womanshelter, said that the shelter is run collectively, with eight full time employees and three part time staff members. Local college students are also hired as interns.

A true interest in battered women is required to work at the Womanshelter, Baker said. Bilingual speech is helpful, and Baker said there are a number of ways for men to get involved at the shelter.

Promotion of the Womanshelter must remain discreet, because of the danger of an abuser of woman finding the house. All staff members and women sign confidentiality statements promising not to reveal the address of the house, Baker said.

Women from the Holyoke-Chicopee area learn about the shelter through word of mouth, posters, pamphlets, and speaking groups.

"Even the phone company knows to refer women to us when they call asking for help," Sue said. The Womanshelter's hotline number is 536-1628.

An education in promises

Implicit in democracy is a promise that the people can better themselves and their country through the political process. But we have all witnessed politicians pervert and break their promises.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis virtually campaigned for his reelection with the promise of bettering this state's public education institutions. More importantly, Dukakis is emphasizing more and more that he is fully committed to improving public higher education in this state.

Ultimately, however, Dukakis' efforts reveal the complete emptiness of his promises to sufficiantly fund this University in particular. His most recent budgetary proposals recommend token allocations for improving the physical and academic conditions that exist here.

For instance, Dukakis recommended $25,000 for the implementation next fall of the General Education program, after the University requested just under $1.3 million for staff, materials and equipment. $25,000 will pay for little more than some new educational aids, but will not provide for additional professors, teaching assistents, administrative staff, or teaching materials.

The University sought $5 million for facilities restoration on campus, a request it has made for five years to upgrade classrooms that are in dire need of paint, waterproofing, plasterwork, proper air conditioning and heating, and electrical work. Dukakis' response was to recommend $150,000 for some masonry repairs.

This recommendation seems to reflect a belief that salary alone attracts outstanding professors, who will not be disturbed by the appalling conditions they may have to teach in.

Similarly, Dukakis recommended that the UMass/Amherst library system receive a one-time special allocation of less than $1 million, against a request for $2.75 million. If the main library is moved to the Library Tower next fall as scheduled, additional funds will be required for more staff, books, and periodicals.

Suffice it to say that Dukakis has perverted and broken his promises.

The only proper response to this is to exact a larger promise, a political promise. This can be achieved by further lobbying the Legislature to amend the governor's recommended budget, for that budget is now in its hands. The Massachusetts Senate and House of Representatives have the power and ability to keep alive the promise of affordable, varied and well-maintained centers of public higher education.

Additionally, a student group is circulating a petition demanding that the Legislature and the Board of Regents of Higher Education adaquately fund those University programs that directly affect student academic needs and support services. We urge every student on this campus to sign that petition, now at a table outside the Hatch, and demonstrate to both the Legislature and the regents we care about and need the student programs we have been promised.

What leftists opt to see

Stephen Erickson

To listen to the left wing academic, political and church groups in this happy valley of ours one, would think that rightist dictatorships in the Third World have a monopoly on oppression and human rights violations. Nothing, however, could be further from the truth. The Sandinista government of Nicaragua is emerging as one of this hemisphere's worst human rights violators, yet many of our neighbors not only apologize for the Sandinistas, they glorify them. Such a moral double standard of the magnitude displayed is the ultimate exercise in hypocracy and ignorance.

Although it seems as though few of us listened, last summer a very important Sandinista defector told a shocking story of Sandinista atrocities. Alvero Baldizon, chief of Special Investigations Commission of Nicaragua's Ministry of the Interior provided specific names, dates, and locations of murders committed against the people of Nicaragua by the Sandinistas. What's more, many of these murders were directed from high up in the Sandinista government, namely in the person of the Interior Minister, Thomas Borge, under the designation of "Special Measures." Baldizon's job was to investigate complaints of government atrocities, and report them to the Ministry of the Interior, where a special commission would then provide a white-washed account of the incident for public comsumption.

One such example is the case of Ramon Torrentes who became known to the Ministry as a writer of anti-Sandinista grafitti. He composed slogans like, "Eden Vuelve," which means "Eden (Pastora, anti-Sandinista rebel) will return." The Sandinistas decided that Torrents was deserving of "Special Measures" and so was arrested in December of 1982. He was burned with cigarettes, left without food or water in a tiny cell for three days, and finally taken out to a remote country road and shot. The official government version of the incident says Torrentes was killed while trying to escape detention.

Baldizon cites many such cases. Guillermo and Jamilette Lorio who were pacifists and deeply involved with the Catholic Church were siezed on the night of July 19, 1983 in the town of San Miguelito. Their children screamed, drawing the attention of a passerby who was gunned down trying to intervene. After Jamilette was raped, the couple was bayonetted. They were both left for dead, but Jamilette was found the next morning by the state security officers still alive, on her knees praying. They finished her off.

On his own personal experience, Baldizon estimates that there have been over 2,000 political killings in Nicaragua. Thomas Borge has authorized so many murders, says Baldizon, he can not remember them all. After the extermination of 150 Miskito Indians, Baldizon attended a meeting where Sandinista officials sat around trying to think up excuses to explain to the Nicaraguan public and the West how and why these Miskito people disappeared.

Baldizon's witness to Sandinista atrocities is the most significant and documentented but is only one account of many horror stories coming out of Nicaragua. We hear little of these atrocities because, as Fred Barnes writes in the January issue of New Republic, Western human rights groups often exercise "selective moral indignation," as they point out the corrupt and immoral nature of countries allied to the United Sates while their criticism of the Sandinistas is "soft-hitting in the extreme." Move over Jerry Falwell. The political agenda and biases of such groups as "Witnesses for Peace," the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, and the Friends Service Committee encourage them to close their eyes to the horrors of the Sandinistas.

Regardless of what we so often hear, Stalinism has come to Central America. It is time we open our eyes and minds to who and what the Sandinistas really are.

U.S. Third World theatrics

William Spain

Clarifying Reagan administration foreign policy seems to be very much in fashion these days. Although professional White House staffers have been in the business of telling us what some of the president's various boneheaded statements really mean for five years, the recent addition of an amateur league dedicated to the same sport is an exciting new development. Since I never could stand to sit on the bench during such events, I hereby announce the formation of a new team—the "Laughing Liberals."

It promises to be a thrill-packed season. The first matches will take place over faraway places with strange-sounding names that most Americans couldn't give a damn about. Do not be turned off by this. The Third World always makes for a productive battleground and with a little patience, the fans should get their money's worth. So, without further ado, let the games begin...

As I understand it, the avowed intention of the Reagan foreign policy team is to not only check Soviet expansionism in developing countries, but to spread freedom and democracy as well. The goal itself is certainly a noble one. It is the methods used to attempt it that are, to say the least, highly questionable. Of course, they are faced with some formidable obstacles along the way—the first of which is the fact that democracies in the Third World are about as common as virgins in a brothel.

This is a difficult but not insurmountable hurdle. Once lost, innocence can never be regained but with consistent encouragement, habits can change. They key word there is "consistent" for it is the lack of that approach which is Ron's fatal flaw.

For instance, there is the matter of using economic leverage, in the form of sanctions and embargoes, to push for reform. It is amusing to note that during the debate over using such methods against South Afica, the Reaganites condemned them on the basis that they just "don't work." At the same time, the president used his excutive powers to sever trade ties with Nicaragua. He also supports the continued economic boycott of Cuba. We are now into the third decade of the latter and the effect has indeed been telling. Cuba has been slipping further and further under the Russian heel and is now completely outside our influence.

They have a similar problem in dealing with liberation movements. Somehow, the Nicaraguan rebels are "freedom fighters" while the African National Congress fighting apartheid is made up of "terrorists." I am no apologist for Sandinista excesses, but I find this double standard an almost Orwellian concept. Supposedly, the boys from Managua have, in the words of a State Department spokesman "betrayed their revolution." Even if that is true, it is hardly fair to pass judgement on them after only six years, when we have given the Boers several generations to clean up their horror show. For that matter, it took us almost 100 years to free the slaves and even longer to extend the franchise to their descendants.

A lack of consistency is a most serious impediment when it comes to advancing American interests at Soviet expense. To halt the further advance of their nightmarish system, we are going to have to [illegible] we preach or refrain from [illegible] at all.

Once in a Lifetime A real-life drama

Twice in a Lifetime ★★★

Starring: Gene Hackman, Ann Magaret and Ellen Burstyn

Directed by Bud Yorkin

Screenplay by Colin Welland

By GREGG FALLON
Collegian Correspondent

If you liked Terms of Endearment,chances are you'll like Twice in a Lifetime. Directed by Bud Yorkin and screenplay by Colin Welland, (who wrote Chariots of Fire) the film stars Gene Hackman as Harry, fifty-year-old Seattle steel worker who is very bored with his life, wife and job. On his fiftieth birthday he meets and falls in love with a barmaid Audrey (played wonderfully by Ann Margaret). The film shows the repercussions and of this untimely affair on Audrey, Harry, and wife Kate and their family.

The film is a slice of life. It is very real in its depiction of suburban life in working class America. The acting is marvelous, and the characters are very human. Human. That word seems to cling in my mind as a description of this film. Harry's wife, Kate is played by Ellen Burstyn. Her role is somewhat tragic, but then becomes that of the recovered failure. Amy Madigan plays Sunny, who, at times over-acts her role as the resentful avenging daughter. Her sister Helen, is played by Ally Sheedy, who apparently hasn't made the jump from children's roles to adult ones. She's got plenty of time.

Twice in a Lifetime doesn't make any lasting statements about life in general but it does lend the viewer a glimpse into the idea of a new start and a second chance in life. For this if nothing else the film is worth seeing.

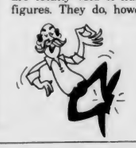
Contrasting exhibits at Herter

By BETTY ANN MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

Currently, a twin exhibition at the Herter Art Gallery features the paintings of Suzanne Ulrich and of Colleen Hayward. Their works differ greatly in subject matter, color, technique and medium.

Ulrich is fascinated with the themes of woman and man as a couple, and with nature. She uses light colors effectively to soften boundaries that might exist between these elements and to heighten the romance of the situation. Ulrich has let her imagination as well as her paintbursh run loose to create fantastic settings for her figures. Titles in this series include Couple, Embrace, and Venus, making the artist's disposition to the romantic even more obvious. In Venus, a woman sprouts from a plant, surrounded by a white sky filled with blue stars and an orange crescent moon.

Colleen Hayward's paintings, unlike those of Ulrich, are totally void of human figures. They do, however, give off an emotional energy that virtually crackles as it reaches out to spark the imagination of the viewer. The major part of Hayward's exhibit is literally "off the wall." She has created on the floor of the sunroom on the south side of the gallery, a tapestry of tiles. Linoleum squares, painted in muted colors, become darker and more numerous as they lead back to the far corner, where a smudgy charcoal landscape has been sketched on the wall.



Whether you stop in to see Suzanne Ulrich's paintings with your Valentine, or simply check out Colleen Hayward's tile installation through the window on your way to class, be sure not to miss this special exhibition.

Youngblood: Rocky on skates

Youngblood ★½
Starring Rob Lowe, Cynthia Gibb, Patrick Swayze
Directed by Peter Markle

By JILL WYLIE
Collegian Correspondent

Youngblood is a cliche-ridden teen film predictable from beginning to end. Rob Lowe is Dean Youngblood, the often portrayed farm-boy type from the sticks with one chance to make good—in this case playing hockey.

Youngblood's only flaw as a player is his inability to fight. In his coach's sexist words "he fights like a girl," and his attempt to get meaner is the center of the plot.

The movie is action-packed, as Youngblood makes the team, gets his eye slashed, is seduced by his landlady, and chases an enemy wearing only a jock—all in the first 15 minutes.

One of the film's biggest problems is its lack of realism. Youngblood excercises in a Rocky-like regimen of sit-ups and punching a bag—with miraculous results for only two days . A teammate, played by Patrick Swayze, receives possible brain damage and a steel plate in his skull, yet appears in the dressing room one game later.

Despite decent performances by Swayze and Jim Young as Youngblood's older brother, I can't say I'd recommend this film. Unless of course you're a Lowe-worshipper under 18. Then just seeing Rob in his jock would make it worthwhile.

TOP of the CAMPUS/5-9 pm

Since the 14th Century and probably earlier this special day has been observed in nearly the same manner it is today. Love letters, cards decorated with satin and lace, and small tokens of affection are sent often anonymously to the object of the heart's desire. Whatever its origins Valentine's Day is a day for remembering that special someone.

Letter to the Professors

Dear Professors,

We are new to the Western Massachusetts area, but we are not new to the travel business. Our agency, based in Greece, has been in operation for six years. We are specialists in coordinating international professional conventions and educational problems.

We welcome your ideas and suggestions, and are prepared to design to your specifications any study programs in Greece. We particularly recommend the Island of Crete for this purpose. Crete is not only breathtakingly beautiful, but also rich with suitable sites for research in a wide variety of fields.

In order to better serve the professors of the five college area, we provide free delivery of flight tickets and itinerary. Also by way of introduction we are offering to you a luxurious package to Greece.

SPORTS

Sophomore Roberto Weil has been one of the leaders of the UMass men's gymnastics team this season.

Weil hitting gymnastic heights

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Correspondent

It is quite an accomplishment to win a national gymastics meet, let alone a prestigious international meet.

When you are only 19 years old and you've already done both, it is even more special.

Roberto Weil, a sophomore on the University of Massachussetts men's gymnastics team, has accomplished both and established himself as one of the top gymnasts in New England.

"Roberto is extremely dedicated," said coach Roy Johnson. "He's very talented and works hard. He's a smart gymnast because he knows what he needs to do to improve and works towards it."

Weil, who moved to Massachussets from Venezuela six years ago, is in his second season of UMass gymnastics. Prior to that, he competed for four years at Wellesly High School, where he first became interested in the sport.

"In my freshman year at Wellesley, I started talking with Bob Pierce, the coach," said Weil. "He's the one who really got me interested in it."

In July, he participated in the all-around competition at the Bay State games and finished in third place. In August, he returned to Venezuela to compete in the Venezuelan Junior Nationals and won all seven events. Because of that performance, he was chosen to represent his country in the Bolivarianos, a prestigious South American meet in honor of Simon Bolivar.

In October, Weil won that meet as well and returned to UMass for a short break before the winter season began, drained from his experiences over the past year.

"I wasn't competing very well at the beginning of this season," said Weil. "My mind was a little burned out and it was hard to concentrate. But Roy really helped me get back in a competitive mood. He's a good motivator."

Because of Weil's slow start at the beginning of the season, Johnson placed him at the middle of the lineup, not normally a showcase spot for gymnasts.

"When Roberto started getting back to his usual level, I asked him if he wanted to move down to a more advantagous spot in the lineup. He told me it didn't matter and wherever I wanted to put him was fine. That is a perfect example of how he always thinks of the team first. He's the ideal kid to coach."

As for the future, Wei who is joined on the team by his younger brother Rafael Angel, just wants to "get through the season and do well in the EIGL's", but Johnson thinks he is capable of more."I think he could place in the all-around in the EIGL's," said Johnson. "And if he places in the top six, he would go to the NCAA's. A good goal for him would be to win the EIGL's. I feel that he is one of the top ten gymnasts in the east and I think he'll qualify for the NCAA's either this year or next."

Don't blink, you'll miss Mike Mundy

Freshman guard providing instant offense

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It's all a matter of style for Mike Mundy.

The casual dribble between the legs at halfcourt, the behind-the-back pass into the middle or the showboat layups in pre-game drills. After all, why be just a basketball player when you can be an entertainer too?

As a 5-10 super quick scoring point guard at Springbrook High in Silver Springs, Maryland, Mundy was a star. His 23 points-per-game, six assists and five steals led his team to a 20-5 record while he copped All-Washington Metro honors, made honorable mention All-American and various all-league and all-county teams.

Recruited by Old Dominion, Seton Hall, Connecticut and George Washington, Mundy came to the University of Massachusetts this season knowing full well that he would have to keep his motor idling on the bench for two seasons as a backup to starting point guard Carl Smith, the school's record holder for assists in a season with 212 and pre-season second-team all-Atlantic 10 selection.

But the draw of being part of a young team with tremendous potential got Mundy to UMass as part of a large freshman class recruited by coach Ron Gerlufsen.

In the 16 games prior to Monday's game against Penn State, Mundy had shown flashes of his high school talent, but 3.6 ppg, 20 assists and 12 steals were at best disappointing to both himself and UMass fans.

But against the Nittany Lions, Mundy exploded for a collegiate high of 12 points in 13 minutes. His four-of-six shooting from the floor, four-of-four perfection at the line and overall shot of intensity to a sleepwalking UMass team helped spark the Minutemen to their second victory in-a-row, 56-52.

Gerlufsen went as far as to move high scorer Lorenzo Sutton out of the backcourt to make room for Mundy in the second half. The lineup of Smith at off-guard, Mundy at the point and Sutton at small forward is with little doubt UM's quickest and will probably be seen more this season.

"Mike added a lot of intensity to the game, he really helped get us the win," said Gerlufsen after the Penn State game. "I think he's developing the way we want him to, he's learning his role and contributing to the team."

Mundy isn't likely to draw a starting assignment until his junior year, but pushes Smith hard every day in practice and now that he has his game under control, is the first guard off the bench for UMass.

"I realize what I have to do," said Mundy. "Coach wants me to speed the action up, but still stay in control and make the plays."

"I feel better about shooting the ball, I'm growing more comfortable in picking my spots and not forcing my shots."

Against Penn State, Mundy hit the last eight UMass points of the first half. Two straight jumpers and four foul shots helped carry the Minutemen into the locker room with a 30-21 lead.

Mundy's jumper, an unusual shot in that the ball travels to the hoop with little rotation, can be a dangerous weapon, but he excells at penetrating to the hoop and either dishing off or creating a layup.

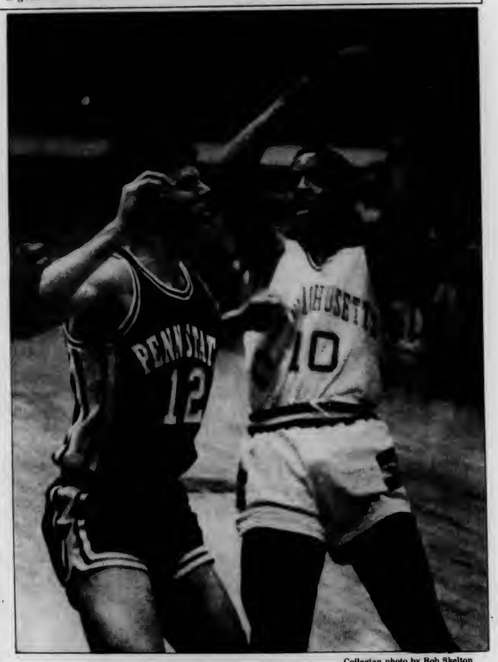
"You can never be too sure what Mike will do," said Smith. "He has a lot of natural ability for basketball. He's a great ballhandler and his offense is improving every game. I think he has a great future."

"I like working with Mike, he's fun to play with," said small forward David Brown. "On defense, he creates a lot of turnovers and we all benefit from that. Offensively, he adds an element of speed to the team."

With five regular season games left this season, Mundy has more chances to prove himself. But when you get up from the bench and the crowd starts applauding because of what they think you might do, something must be going right."

"This was a great feeling," Mundy said after beating Penn State. "I want to keep on feeling like this after all the rest of the games.

Minuteman Mutterings: UMass, at 5-8 in the division, is two games back in the win column behind Duquesne (7-8). The Dukes still must face Temple in Philadelphia, George Washington in D.C., St. Joseph's at home and Rhode island at home before hosting the Minutemen on Feb. 22 in the final regular season game of the season.



UMass is currently sixth the the league and if the league playoffs started tomorrow, they would face Temple at Temple. The way the playoffs works like so: The bottom four teams meet with – 10 at – 7 and – 8 at – 9 (on campus sites).

The quarterfinals would see the number 1 play either 7 of 10 with – 2 hosting 8 or 9. The third place team would play the sixth place team and the fourth and fifth place teams would square off, all at the home court of the higher seed.

The semifinals would be in the Meadowlands in New Jersey on March 1 with the finals also there on Marh 3 (7 p.m. on ESPN).

UMass is looking for a fifth place finish, as they would love to avoid probable third place team Temple as the Owls are undefeated against the Minutemen in eight games since the season series started and have blown UMass out at home several times.

A fifth place finish would set up a probably matchup against St. Bonaventure, a team UMass can beat despite two losses this season.

Residents held in Nicaragua

By BLAKE CORNISH
Collegian Correspondent

Eleven area residents, including students from the University of Massachusetts and Hampshire College, say they were pinned down for nearly two hours by contra machine-gun fire while they were on a work brigade in Nicaragua last month.

The 11, members of the Northampton-based Construyamos Juntas, spent the month of January working with a larger group to build a school in San Pedro do Lovago, a small town in central Nicaragua.

The group included a UMass graduate student, two Hampshire College students and eight other local residents.

The attack by US-backed guerrillas occurred on Jan. 25, they said, while the group was celebrating the birthday of Sam School, a UMass doctoral candidate in the School of Education.

"I thought it would be rather ironic to die on my birthday with my own tax dollars," School said in a recent interview. "Ordinarily, we would have been all spread out ... It was really terrifying."

Group members plan to describe the attack in a presentation at 7:30 p.m. today in the main lecture hall of Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College.

Group members said the attack began about 10 p.m., shortly after two members of the American group had left the party to go to the town square.

"We heard machine-gun fire about a block away," said Hampshire student David Smathers, who was at the party. "Some people thought that it was firecrackers for a religious celebration."

Smathers said several people went to the front door of the house to see what was happening, and saw the two who had left running back to the house. They could see tracer bullets passing over the Americans' heads.

"Someone, we don't know who, was firing over their heads," Smathers said. "I didn't see it. I was already on the floor crawling back to the house."

Two townspeople were wounded in the attack, and one contra was killed, according to Smathers. The Americans stayed in their house through the night, fearing a return attack by the contras. At dawn, he said, they ventured out and saw cars riddled with bullet holes and craters in the street from grenade explosions.

The attack raises a serious issue for US activist groups, which have generally believed that Americans are relatively safe in Nicaragua.

"We're more skeptical of that now," Smathers said. The members of Construyamos Juntos believe they were the first group of US citizens working on an aid project to be in a village during a contra attack.

Several Nicaraguans who were at the party during the attack wanted to flee, according to Smathers, fearing that the brigade would be a target for the contras. One Nicaraguan crawled to the front of the house and pulled down the banner that identified the residents as part of the brigade.

Shooting between the contras and town militia went on for about two hours before the contras, estimated at about 40 or 50 by town militia, retreated, Smathers said.

Since returing to the US on Feb. 1, members of Construyamos Juntos have held press conferences and spoken with congressional aides about the attack. Other members, including Hampshire student Beth Mattison, remain in Nicaragua working on the school.

Last day to vote on group fees

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students will have one last chance today to vote on whether they want to retain $3 in optional fees used in funding two student groups.

The referendum asks students to vote yes or no on the question,"Should the following fees be removed from your semester bill: Massachusetts Public Information and Research Group (MassPIRG), State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM)?"

The voting began yesterday amid controversy from both opponents and proponents of the optional funding of MassPIRG and SSAM.

"The voting is going well. We ran out of ballots in two places: Hampshire and the Hatch," said Karen Morvay, Chairwoman of the Undergraduate Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

Brian Darling of Students for Participatory Democracy, the group sponsoring the referendum, said his group objects to the "negative checkoff" system by which MassPIRG and SSAM receive the majority of their funding.

Under the "negative check-off" system, the fee–$2 for MassPIRG and $1 for for SSAM– is automatically included in the total tuition, unless the student fills out a waiver on the back of the bill and subtracts the amount from the total.

Forum addresses unionization need

Harvey Friedman: "Higher education in Massachusetts has not been effectively supported by the governor and Legislature."

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

Non-academic professional staff at the University of Massachusetts need unionized collective bargaining power to protect them from two recent government obstacles, according to the director of the Labor Relations and Research Center.

The effects of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law and an un-supportive governor and state Legislature are the two main problems facing the Amherst campus, Harvey Friedman said yesterday.

Friedman spoke to 22 persons in a forum held by the UMass Office of Human Relations, to explore "how the larger politics of Massachusetts higher education affect staff professionals," and the implications for unionization.

"Higher education in Massachusetts has not been effectively supported by the governor and the Legislature," Friedman said. "We're the only state in the union where more of our residents go to private colleges than to public colleges."

Friedman noted, however, that Massachusetts had the second highest increase in state aid to higher education in the country between fiscal year 1983 and 1984. That increase is based on a on a financial base which is "somewhat smaller" than those of other states, Friedman said.

"Gramm-Rudman will hit us in terms of student aid," he said. "All other programs that are hit at the state level [by Gramm-Rudman] will have to made up by state funds, which will hurt us."

"What will happen [to non-academic staff] when the budget is cut to a per-capita budget? What happens when non-faculty personnel have no one to protect them? " Friedman asked, pointing out that presently non-academic staff can be fired if the state is in a "financial contingency."

Friedman said that collective bargaining power would enable a union to influence job reclassification by including a clause to that effect in a contract. This would make it impossible for the administration to unilaterally impose job reclassification, such as the controversial Olney study that came out last fall, upon non-academic staff.

Timothy Bornstein, professor of management, said that third party arbitration is "a clearer, purer system than the morass of the old administrative system." Bornstein said the image of unions as representing blue-collar, smokestack industries is outdated.

"The trend toward white-collar unionization is very pragmatically-directed," Bornstein said. "Hundreds of physicians who are unionizing are not doing it for ideological reasons. But when it comes to their financial security, they are quite progressive."

Office of Human Relations Director Judith Davis, who coordinated the forum, said the opinions expressed at the forum were those of the speakers and not of her office.

Power failure hits area

Amherst and Pelham residents with electric stoves faced dinnertime delays yesterday evening when a power outage that lasted about an hour swept through the area.

A representative of Western Massachusettts Electric Company said the power outage started at 5:19 p.m. and was caused by an overloaded circuit in the University of Massachusetts area. She would not disclose the exact location of the problem.

Parts of the UMass campus including the Campus Center were plunged into several seconds of darkness.

Electricity was restored in most areas at 6:24 p.m., but the Echo Hill area of Amherst was still without power at 7:20 p.m. The company said the cause of the Echo Hill outage was not related to the first and was under investigation.

As a result of the overloaded circut, a small generator backfired in the Lederle Graduate Research Center at UMass, causing a small fire and some smoke in the building. The Amherst Fire Department responded to the fire. University of Massachusetts Police said.

Tylenol death unlike others

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) – The type of cyanide that killed a woman who took Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules last weekend differed from the poison that killed seven people in Chicago in 1982, the Food and Drug Administration said yesterday.

Diane Elsroth, 23, of Peekskill died Saturday after taking two capsules of Extra-Strength Tylenol, at least one of which contained potassium cyanide, Dr. Millard Hyland, county medical examiner, said.

Tests conducted on two of three poisoned capsules found in the bottle used by Elsroth showed that the cyanide had a different chemical profile from the chemical used in Chicago in 1982, FDA spokesman William Grigg said yesterday from his Washington area office.

The Chicago case remains unsolved.

The poisons used in both killings also differed from the cyanide used for testing and quality control in the Johnson & Johnson plant that produces the painkiller, Grigg said.

The FDA inspected the factory where the pills were made and determined that "there were no indications that the contamination could be the result of the manufacturing," he said.

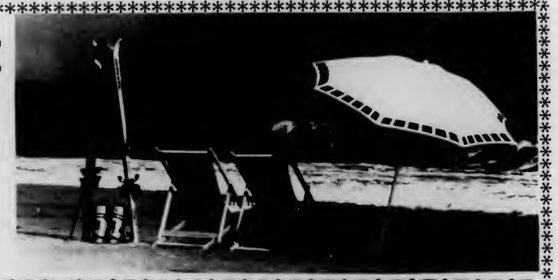
Students protest Brandeis holdings

WALTHAM (AP) – Brandeis University has divested of many of its investments in companies with South African ties, but students who have erected a campus shantytown in protest of the holdings say that's not good enough.

The students vow they will occupy the shack until the college sells all its investments in companies that do business in South Africa.

Working in four-hour shifts, the students have been sleeping, eating and partying at the 50-foot-long plywood structure since they put it up last Thursday on a quadrangle across from the university library.

"We're prepared to stay out here until they divest," student Deb Bix of Winthrop said Tuesday.



Unlike officials at Dartmouth College, where a shantytown has triggered clashes between students, protesters and the administration, Brandeis officials say they will not interfere. Violence also has erupted over a shantytown at Stanford University.

But at Brandeis, "there's no intention to interfere with these activities," said university spokesman Steve Cohen.

Student reflects on overseas job

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

When most students visit a foreign country, they spend a few months traveling, have a great time, and then return to finish their academic careers. One former University of Massachusetts student, however, went to Israel and had the course of her life altered through pure luck.

In 1983, after spending a summer on a kibbutz, or collective farm, in Israel, Heidi Levine, then a UMass junior, walked into the Associated Press bureau in Tel Aviv and asked for a job. Without a resume, samples of her work or prior experience, Levine was hired as a photographer.

"I never expected to get the job. It was a fluke," Levine said, speaking to journalism classes in Bartlett Hall Tuesday. "I had every intention in the world of returning to school the following fall. The job offer disrupted all of that."

Levine majored in journalism at UMass and was a photographer for the Collegian. She said she decided to go to Israel because she wanted to have a summer to herself. After spending the summer milking cows at the kibbutz, she traveled three hours to Tel Aviv to go to the AP office. Levine, a Lexington native, said she contacted the AP offices in Boston and New York before she left to find out who to talk to.

Since she started working for AP, Levine has covered the Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon, the airlift of Ethiopian Jews, and human interest feature stories. Most pictures and stories about the military must be submitted to censors, something that is a fact of life in Israel, Levine said.

"If you get into trouble with the censors, you or your news organization can be thrown out of the country," she said. The airlift of the Ethiopian Jews was a story that AP broke without submitting for censorship. Subsequent coverage of the airlift was censored, Levine said.

Levine is finishing her education part time at the University of Tel Aviv, where she is in the overseas program, "taking a lot of political science courses." She said she didn't speak Hebrew when she went to Israel, and is still learning the language.

"I would like to remain overseas until I'm ready to settle down. I figure I'm young, so I might as well do it now instead of in 10 years when I might not be able to pick up and go," Levine said.

She said she would like to cover the political situation in South Africa and would be interested in working in Central America or the Philippines because big news is occurring there.

Paley talks at Smith

Grace Paley, author and Jewish radical

Being Jewish means being a social person, a well-known author and Jewish radical said last night to a capacity crowd in the Neilson Library Browsing Room of Smith College.

"Being Jewish is being a socialist, [actually] having an acute feeling of social consciousness," said Grace Paley, a professor of creative writing at Sarah Lawrence College.

Paley said she grew in a Jewish ghetto in the Bronx, which "was warm and comfortable, filled with people who are just like you." Her speech was titled "Thinking Globally, Acting Jewish."

Her first world view came from her parents who emigrated to the United States from Russia in 1905 because they were Social Democrats who opposed the autocracy. "They were so [Jewish and] secular they know the word secular," she said.

"We talked about the whole wide world at the dinner table," Paley said.

Paley was never interested in her religion, but used to bring her grandmother to synagogue "because I liked my grandmother," she said.

After moving from the Bronx to Vermont, Paley said she had to make an effort to be Jewish because of the lack of Jewish persons in the area.

"Everybody does it out of a real loneliness for their own people who they spent their whole damn lives with,"she said.

"That's where I began, that's where I continue, and that's where I'll probably die," Paley said referring to her home in New York.

Paley said despite the problem of assimilation, many young persons, especially women, have become more interested in religion.

"The feminist movement enabled them [the next generation] of women to elbow their way, in a nice way, into the synagogue and enabled lots of young women to return to a more religious life than I know," she said.

Paley finished her speech by reading some of her humorous short stories and poems, including In this Country, But in Another Language, My Aunt Refuses to Marry the Man Everybody Wants Her To, and Mother.

Undergrad senate plows through agenda

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

At the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting last night, the senate approved changes to the by-laws concerning the Budgets Committee, and defeated a motion to eliminate two positions on the Governmental Affairs Committee.

But first the senate listened to– and applauded– the woords of a 71-year-old peace activist.

Phyllis Roden spoke about her plans to travel to Los Angeles to participate in the Great Peace March, in which 5000 people will march 3,235 miles to Washington,D.C. for the cause of nuclear disarmament.

"It is time for people to take part in this country, and not to leave it to the experts," she said.

Speaking about last week's space shuttle disaster, she said "The sheer disregard of those people shows that the military can't be trusted."

The senate was to have voted on a motion granting a full vote of confidence to John L. Ruddock, the senate speaker. Senator M. Lynn Murphy withdrew the motion before it came to a vote because "actions speak louder than words.

"There is no doubt there are opposing ideologies in this body, as there are in any other. We need to be a unified group, and fully support John Ruddock," Murphy said.

The majority of the meeting was spent on a motion calling for the regrouping of the appointed positions on the Governmental Affairs Committee. The motion would have changed the by-laws, and eliminated two representives from the Third World caucus, and the affirmative action officer.

"There is no doubt there are opposing ideologies in this body . . . we need to be a unified group . . ."
Senator Lynn Murphy

The senate spent 20 minutes debating an amendment to the original motion. Much of the debate centered around the amendment having the same meaning as the section already written in the by-laws.

During this motion, order seemed to deteriorate on the senate floor, and Ruddock had to pound his gavel a number of times to gain attention.

"I'm tired of asking for everyone to be quiet," he shouted.

The motion was defeated with a vote of 17-23.

In business concerning the Budgets Committee, the senate voted to amend three sections of its by-laws, which will make the committee more efficient in the yearly budget process, committee chairman Jordan Rosner said.

No executive selected

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate was unable to elect an executive officer or vote on a proposed amendment to its constitution this week at a general meeting of graduate students attended by less than than 30 people.

The senate did elect John Hayes as vice-president to replace George Claxton, who became president when his predecessor resigned. Hayes resigned as executive officer to seek the vice-presidency.

At the meeting Tuesday night, the senate had to vote to suspend a constitutional rule that requires that it elect a new officer within two weeks of the resignation of an officer.

Another general meeting of graduate students was then called for Feb. 25, at which the senate will conduct a run-off election between the two remaining candidates for executive officer and will try again to vote on the constitutional amendment, which Claxton said required 75 students to be considered.

On the original ballot for executive officer, Nancy Muller-Milligan received 11 votes, while write-in candidate Gary Jakacky and Jonathan Frank received 10 and five votes, respectively.

Because Muller-Milligan did not receive a majority of votes in the original election, a run-off election was held in which Jakacky and Muller-Milligan received 11 votes apiece, prompting the senate to suspend its constitution and postpone the election until the meeting on Feb. 25.

The senate also will re-examine guidelines for its ad-hoc funding budget. Existing guidelines prohibit funding of "departmental groups and organizations," and this has caused the senate's finance committee to deny funding for at least two groups.

Claxton reported that the Chancellor's Committee on Civility has received several accusations of assaults on UMass employees by their supervisors, including one case in which a Physical Plant supervisor allegedly picked up a female employee and bodily threw her out of his office.

Claxton said that University administrators have refused to inform the woman of any possible action against the supervisor.

Man arrested with marijuana

A 25-year-old man was taken into protective custody and charged with the possession of marijuana at 12:14 a.m. yesterday in the Student Union Building, University of Massachusetts Police said.

The man was taken into custody when security guards said he was allegedly drunk and being disruptive. The marijuana was found during a routine inventory search by police after he was taken to the police station, police said.

In other police reports:

• A pizza valued at $7.50 was reported stolen at 1:07 a.m. yesterday in John F. Kennedy Tower from a delivery person from Andy's Pizza. A resident of the building had called the restaurant and said he received the wrong order. The delivery person brought over another pizza and, in return, received an empty box containing weights substituted as a pizza, police said.

• A car driven by a 19-year-old Mount Holyoke College student received over $1000 in damages in a three-car accident at 9:58 a.m. Tuesday on West Street.

The woman sideswiped a vehicle driven by a 54-year-old Irving man. He hit another car head-on which was driven by a 46-year-old Hadley man. The other cars received less than $1000 in damages, Amherst Police said.

"We would be more happy with the positive check-off. We feel that is a good solution," Darling said.

Michael Ferrigno, the executive director of SSAM, defended the system, saying fees for his group are "cost effective" for students.

"Last year, for about the price of a beer each semester, we saved every student $24 in tuition costs," he said.

Throughout the campaign, each side has charged the other with unethical tactics, and yesterday was no exception.

Darling produced pictures of Matt Wilson, a MassPIRG member, apparently tearing down a poster on Sunday night. Darling also said MassPIRG members tore down more than 100 SPD posters.

Wilson admitted to tearing down two posters to be used as evidence against SPD campaign wrongdoings.

"They were waiting for us with a camera and after we went upstairs, they pulled down the rest and said we did it," Wilson said.

3rd World lacks resources

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

Women in Third World countries are powerless in the fight against population growth because of inadequate medical facilities and birth control education, a Northampton feminist author said at a lecture yesterday.

"Women are being denied resources to get greater control of their lives," Elizabeth Hartmann, the first guest lecturer in a series at Hampshire College, told a group of about 35 people.

Hartmann said women are not being properly informed about contraception in Third World countries where programs are attempting to control the birth rate.

"Alleviating suffering is the best contraception," Hartmann said. The current approach to family planning has largely failed because so many women have had bad experiences and side effects, causing them to drop out. "We need to offer different methods," she said.

"Women get very little choice as to what kind of contraception that they use. There are IUD [interuterine device] safaris, and women from villages come and leaders tell them how it is their 'moral' obligation to use contraception. So, they get the IUD," Hartmann said, adding that the pill and IUD are promoted with little if any supervision.

When women are given contraception without choice, Hartmann said, they also are not educated about it. She recalled an incident she had learned of at a conference, where a woman was fitted with an IUD and had no follow-up exams after the initial insertion until five years later, when someone came and removed it.

Hartmann attributed the treatment of these women largely to the way their society treats them.

"If they are infertile or only have girls, they are deserted, treated badly or divorced. Mothers need children to guard their rights to land, expecially sons," she said.

Women are secluded, and they can't roam outside their neighborhood. Men migrate, leaving women on the farm and they are overworked," said Hartmann.

She also said that health services are not available. "In Kenya, the health services are few and far between. Sometimes women must travel six hours and are turned away unless they are a certain age."

Hartmann said that women were paid to be sterilized and even given an article of clothing that she referred to as "compensation." In many cases, she said, if they refuse to be sterilized or have too many children, they are refused public housing.

THE MEXICAN RESTAURANT

SAVING THE LORD JEFF...

Amherst College's abrupt decision to close the Lord Jeffery Inn is either the culmination of consistent and extraordinarily poor business practices, or a thinly disguised attempt to break the employees' union. Either way, the college's approach accomplishes nothing except to deny the community the use of the inn, and to deny the seventy employees their jobs.

The union's proposal is, in contrast to the college's, a constructive plan which begins the process of saving the inn on a sound business basis. As such, it deserves the support of reasonable alumni, faculty, students, and area residents:

- Keep the inn open until April 25, 1986.
- Freeze all wages and benefits in accordance with the expiring contract, with no increase until April 25.
- The college should complete a study of the inn's future by February 15.
- The college and the union should negotiate following the completion of the college's study.
- If no agreement is reached by March 25 all unresolved issues including the future of the inn will be submitted to a fact finding panel, which will make non-binding recommendations to the college, to the union, and to the community by April 25.
- The panel should include three respected people from the community: an expert in hotel management selected by the college; a labor relations expert selected by the union; and a mutually agreed upon Amherst College faculty member.

If this makes sense to you, please call us or write Local 217, Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union, 86 Gillett St., Hartford, CT 06105 (203) 246-2561.

Since the 14th Century and probably earlier, this special day has been observed in nearly the same manner it is today. Love letters, cards decorated with satin and lace, and small tokens of affection are sent, often anonymously, to the object of the heart's desire. Whatever its origins, Valentine's Day is a day for remembering that special someone.

Shaping a future

Dave Johnson

Tim Harris, (Collegian, Feb. 6) ought to visit his optometrist and see if something can't be done about his "terminal" tunnel vision. Harris seems to be an example of the conservative types who never look more than 10 or 15 years down the road, envisioning a $30,000 plus/year job, a two car garage attached to a nice split level in the suburbs. They live out a miserably short existance, and die in a retirement home somewhere in Florida.

No one has all the answers, but it seems some of us profess to. Stop the space program, and we can use all that money to put unemployed auto and steel workers back on the job. We could build housing projects for all our poor, and create useless jobs to keep them happy for awhile. But we wouldn't want them to get our jobs of course. Maybe one of those steelworkers or autoworker's jobs, but not ours.

Those myopic individuals of questionable intelligence in our world should collectively kneel down and thank their God that there are and always have been people in this world with the ability to foresee problems far into the future, and to plan for it as best we can. What will we do when we run out of fossil fuels and mineable heavy ores early in the year 2000? Steel workers and autoworkers will be in trouble then, I would think. A world without conventional fuel or ore to make steel will take all the fun out of being employed by the auto or steel industries. But the attitude of some is, well, we'll worry about that when it happens.

I couldn't possibly list in a Collegian column the massive changes that are going to confront this planet in the near future. Global temperature changes, CO2 evolution, solar radiation, water recycling, and population will be there at the top of the list, provided we don't vaporize ourselves in a nuclear slugfest in the meantime. Everyone worries about a nuclear war. It's an event that would occur in 20 minutes or less. The aforementioned things will kill us just as surely if not planned for, only it will take decades. Therefore, most of us sit back, confident that it won't occur in our lifetime, which is the important thing. No need to worry about the future, because "they" (that clandestine, unnamed group that does things like develop vaccines, weather satellites, look for cancer cures, etc.; those things that keep the world functioning that we needn't concern ourselves with) will take care of it.

Well, "they" are doing something about it now. We have to assume, as scientists, that a nuclear war will not happen. If it does, it does and that's that. If it doesn't, and we don't plan for the ecological disasters that we now know await us in the future, it may as well have. The space program is part of that planning.

All those things that Harris espouses to be useless knowledge, ie. the mineral content of moonrocks, the atmospheric conditions on Mars, the appearance of one of Jupiter's moons, etc., are only useless to people who have no clue how to interpret it. All of this information is extremely valuable. It tells a story to scientists, a story about how we came to occupy this niche in the universe. By finding out the origins of the universe and our solar system, and looking at recurring extraterrestrial events (which we have the space program to thank for) we can predict where this planet is headed and try to plan accordingly. If not, we will come and go as surely as the dinosaurs.

Human beings planning far into the future to try and assure life for other human beings, at a time when they themselves have long since returned to dust, is what makes us unique. Several weeks ago, seven unique people gave their lives in trying to shape that future for the better. They, unlike so many of us, will not be forgotten.

Dave Johnson is a UMass student.

LSO position a priority

Roth/Burgess

Since the inception of the SGA and its involvement in budgeting the SATF, there has been a struggle between the SGA and the administration concerning control over these monies. This year has been no exeption – since November, the SATF has been an issue of conflict between students and the administration, and in the coming semester we wil hopefully see a positive resolution of this conflict.

The SATF is generated by annual student fees. Each year every student pays $88 into the SATF to form a $1.7 million trust fund. The SGA budgets this money to various student organizations and student agencies. For example, Union Program Council, Distinguished Vistors Program, the Outing Club, the UMass Republican Club, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), the PVTA, the Student Activities Office, and the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance are all funded through the SATF. These, as well as the other 50 or so organizations and agencies funded through the SATF, provide essential services and activities to the entire University community. These activites and services include: concerts, speakers, busing, publications, social activities, political events, counselling and legal services.

On Nov. 19, 1985, a memo was written which instigated all of the excitement about the SGA/SATF. That memo was written by Director of Student Activities Randy Donant, and Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson. The memo was written without consultation with student leaders and, intentional or not, significantly reduced the influence and direction that students have over the SATF.

Claiming that the SGA was not managing the SATF well, Donant and Madson made attempts on the SGA's budgeting power by way of certain "conditions" outlined in the above mentioned memo. The memo included a ban on a fee increase (which could have alleviated some of the SATF's fiscal problems) and changing the budget procedure so that students would have much less influence over the SATF and its priorities. The memo was met with fierce student opposition which led to the formation of Students Advocating for Rights Together. START's rallies, sit-ins, educational outreach and arrests were demands for negotiations with the administration over SATF control.

In December, over intersession and during this semester, START and the administration have begun to form a "Chancellor's Review Commission of the SGA/SATF." Trey Williams, a special assistant to Dennis Madson, and Dani Burgess have been meeting, and meeting and meeting, trying to reach agreement on the charge and composition of the Commission. A major stumbling block is the issue of whether or not we will be hiring a fourth permanent lawyer for the Legal Services Office. Historically, the Legal Services Office has employed four full time attorneys to serve students. However, the administration is currently preventing a temporary attorney's position from being filled permanently. START feels that the fourth attorney issue is symbolic of the entire question – which is, who sets the primary goals and objectives for the trust fund. Students are saying, in strong harmony, that we want to prioritize a fourth attorney. The administration is asking us to wait until a LSO 12-year review is complete. Until this issue is resolved, the Review Commission of the SGA/SATF is on hold.

The SATF is of intense concern to us, as students, as it is the student activities provided by it which improve our quality of life at UMass. History has shown us that the SATF has consistently been a point of contention between students and the administration. Right now, it is our greatest hope the fourth attorney issue will see a resolve soon and that the Commission's recomendations will provide clear direction and role clairification so that all of us at the University can focus on more productive issues. The first issue though, is to get "START"ed.

Rightist mythological discourse

I strongly disagree with Stephen Erickson's column on U.S. foreign policy goals. Rather than being the "debunker of myths" that he claims to be, his words are in fact tightly woven into the fabric of a mythological discourse. He summarizes the mythology with which he identifies: "U.S. foreign policy is, and has been for quite some time, to encourage stable, economically sound, democratically-oriented and human governments."

Since he does not substantiate the claims of stability and economic soundness, I will leave them in the conspicuous silence that best illuminiates their absurdity; noting only that there is nothing sound or stable about the countries in Central Amerca or the Philippines, and that this situation is due largely to the historically exploitative coalition between the U.S. and elite interests in those countries.

The claim that the United States promotes democratic and humane governments is equally erroneous. Erickson states that the U.S. did not support Somoza. In fact, the U.S. empowered and strongly supported the whole Somozan dynasty throughout almost all of its cruel dictatorship from 1934-1979. Even in the late 70s, when it became excruciatingly clear that Somoza was one of the worst violators of human rights in this hemisphere, the U.S. position was ambiguous. Though we finally froze arms transfers, as late as May of 1979 we supported the regime by allowing a $66 million I.M.F. loan to be approved without U.S. opposition. When it was clear that Somoza's regime was crumbling, we advocated an OAS intervention in a last ditch effort to salvage what we thought we could of a regime that we never should have supported to begin with. When it was clear that Somoza's defeat was imminent, we advocated elections to be held three years later -- elections that were likely to be as free as those in the Phillipines are likely to be. If we care so much about democracy and human rights, why weren't we supporting "freedom fighters" when Somoza was in power?

And where were these high values when we supported the El Salvadoran regime that butchered 30,000 of its citizens in the early 1980s? Where are they now in our current support for the El Salvadoran government as it reduced the Quiche Indians to incredible poverty ($81/person/year) and then slaughtered thousands with its U.S. backed army in the early part of this decade? Where have our ideals been in our continuous support of Marcos and our military and economic support of S. Africa?

Yes, let's correct misrepresentations. Our foreign policy has not been based on the values of democracy and human rights. In order to change, we must first confront the fact that a steady stream of blood flows through the veins of our foreign policy -- like the oil that flows through the veins of our industry.

Nature of 'dependency'

Peter Dow

For many years now a specific school of political thought has championed the theory of "dependency" as an explanation for the underdevelopment of the Third World. In particular, these dependency theorists claim that the conditions of poverty in many Latin American countries is the resut of exploitation; specifically, they blame American "imperialism." Dependency theory advocates spout generalized complaints, all laid at the feet of multinationals and the U.S. government, that attempt to account for all of Latin American ills.

It is alleged that multinationals pay wages that are too low, that they buy off political leaders and support oppressive regimes, and that they take more capital out of Latin America than they put in. While it would be foolish to deny that any examples of such practices exist, it is incorrect for dependency theorists to conclude these were general policies of multinationals and the U.S. goverment. In addition, it is a myth that these two "evil" institutions caused Latin American dependency and poverty. Indeed, the causes are much more complex than the Marxist rhetoric of dependency suggests.

First, one must investigate the distinctive political, cultural, and societal differences between the U.S. and Latin America. Both were simultaneously subject to European colonialism, yet the U.S. quickly and successfully broke free from its subjection, while Latin America required more time to obtain independence, and thus developed more slowly. The culprit here is not American imperialism, since no such capability existed at that time; rather, much blame lies directly in the negative Latin American attitudes towards capitalist economic development. In particular, one must look at the strong institutional role played by the Catholic church in the region, quite in contrast to the relaxed role played by Protestant and Catholic churches in the United States.

The activities of Latin American churches concentrated on extensive social services and education for its people. At the same time, individualism, entrepreneurship, commerce and industry were treated with disdain and hostility by the Catholic hierarchy in Latin America. Capitalist economic activity was interpreted as being "materialistic," and the pursuit of profit was "evil." Thus, although much capitalist spirit could have been generated in the region, it had little spiritual support from the church or society.

Thus it is certainly incorrect to claim that U.S. imperialism was the sole cause of Latin American underdevelopment, since much of the blame rests with the practices of Latin American nations themselves. Yet the dependency school of thought is still alive, primarily because it has been adopted by Latin American liberation theologians.

Spouting Marxist rehetoric, these preachers attempt to give Americans a guilt complex, and thus they hope to extract restitution in the form of redistribution of wealth and other socialist programs. There are, however, many flaws in the theory of dependency.

First, capitalism is not a static economic phenomenon; it is inherently dynamic and continuously expanding. Thus it is a myth that progress and profit in one place must have been achieved at the expense of another place. Today, there is far more wealth than there was 200 years ago; indeed, the "center" of economic activity has continually expanded to the "periphery," thus improving the lot of all. This situation should be contrasted with the far more dependent relationship between socialist states. For instance, Cuba is so dependent on the Soviet Union that it would be devasted if the Soviets ever withdrew the enormous price supports they provide for Cuban sugar.

Secondly, dependence theorists must contend with the facts concerning U.S. corporate investment. Only 5 percent of total investment is made abroad, and 70 percent of those investments are directed toward developed countries. Indeed, less than 20 percent of U.S. foreigh investment goes to Latin America; this corresponds to less than 1 percent of the U.S. GNP. Thus the amounts of U.S. investment in Latin America, both throughout history and at present, have been relatively insignificant, particulary when compared with U.S. investments in Europe and Japan. Indeed, it seems highly unlikely that such relatively small amounts would have made Latin America dependent.

Finally, liberation theologians who endorse the dependency theory constantly enunciate condemnations of capitalism; yet they never venture to say that business, entrepreneurship, and economic activity might be crucial and indispensile aids in fighting poverty.

In short, dependency theorists have concluded, using a traditional Marxian model, that "if I am poor, my poverty is due to malevolent and powerful others." While no one can deny the great economic power of America, one must realize that Latin American countries deserve at least a substantial amount of blame for their own social and economic conditions.

Why there must be a law

Remember, if you will, a time when you were so upset that you didn't even want a hug from a friend. You weren't thinking straight, or other things were occupying your mind, and you chose to refuse the comfort that you most certainly needed.

Now remember a friend who hugged you anyway. It didn't take you breaking down to make it clear to you that the hug helped. A friend helped you against your will, and at some point, you were glad they did.

Michael Dukakis is your friend. He also happens to be the Massachusetts governor who signed the now-effective seat belt law. That self same man has encountered a good deal of opposition (bitching, moaning, and general grumpy griping) from persons who would rather buckle up. A friend of mine said to me "I'm all for the living, but I'm not for the law." Funny how that kind of hits me as being all for living, but not for breathing. Think about it.

Let's listen in on some conversation about the seat belt law. Two people at the TOC, or better yet, at the Blue Wall, exchanging comments and sipping espresso, with a lemon twist. It's very good . . .

"Give me a break. That law isn't going to change a thing. People are going to die in accidents no matter what we do."

Whether or not one cares to admit it, seat belts save lives, and so does a seat belt law. You want a few examples? Fine. The fatality rate for automobile accidents in the state of New York has fallen 20 percent. The same is true for the UK, but the rate has fallen 25 percent. One out of four people who might have dies, didn't. They're alive. The figures for these cases and others cannot be nailed down as a definite and direct result of the respective seat belt laws, but not much else has changed. Think about it.

"I've never worn a seat belt in my life, and I'm fine."

What a wonderful, intelligent, logical argument. If you were blindfolded, and crossed the street at regular intervals, you might just make it across a few times before you become part of the pavement. Wake up, people. The "It'll never happen to me!" philosophy is about as effective as coitus interruptus. (For clarification of this term write to Ask Beth or The Playboy Advisor.)

"It's a pain." "Seat belts aren't comfortable." "The rumple up my nice clothing."

Let's compare the first two quotes to the unpleasantness experiences of going to the doctor or dentist. Going before you need them may seem like an inconvenience, but it saves an awful lot of pain and expense later, when it's too late. When you're talking about the use of seat belts, too late is really too late. And as for "my fine clothing, Woolite and a hot ir

"It's my business, and it doesn't affect anyone else if I don't wear a seat belt."

Au contraire. Let's talk about this one. It is a fact that the greater the injuries that you sustain, the greater the amount some insurance company has to dish out, and in turn, the deeper said insurance company will dig into the rest of our pockets. Funny how no person is an island when insurance is concerned. In addition, with the existance of the new law, and the past records of effectiveness, the state will have due course to pressure (or mandate) the insurance companies to lower their rates. Not bad, huh?

All in all, the law makes sense. In theory, in practice, and for the future. Now, if we can teach our children to use seat belts as second nature, rather than avoiding their use (law or no law) wouldn't that be nice. It would make my day. So how about it? Take the law to heart, and buckle up.

Living with a job loss

Timothy Harris

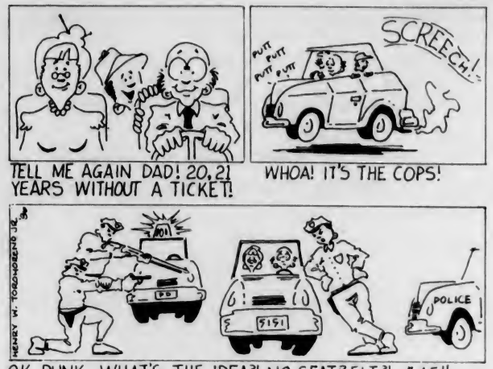
Imagine you've graduated. Imagine you have car payments, a mortgaged house, are married, and have three children. You're not rich but you're relatively happy. The children are eating, they have clothes -- the wolf is far from your door. Imagine now that you have just been laid off from the company that you've worked at for seven years.

A lump comes to the throat, your dreams go gray, and the injustice of it burns a hole in your gut, and there is no one to strike out at. A faceless bureaucracy perches impassive.

This scenario was repeated in different ways 900 times over last week when United Technologies announced it was leaving Springfield for greener pastures in South Carolina, Indiana and Italy, where the labor is cheap and the unions ineffectual. The gates of the 76-year old factory will lock in August.

Only a few months before, United Technologies had assured workers that reports of their leaving the area were no more than "rumours." They said they would be in Springfield for at least two more years. Understandably, the workers feel betrayed.

Chris Bergeron, who has worked at the plant for seven years, grew up with United Technologies. His father recently retired after giving the company 41 years of his life. Bergeron was bitter after the plant gave notice of its departure. "They've been taking our work," he said, "We invented it, we perfected it. They sucked us dry."



The damage to a community like Springfield when a major employer pulls out doesn't stop with the primary loss of jobs. A ripple-effect spreads through the city leaving job loss and reduced wages in its wake. Shops that did business with the company, stores its employees shopped at, all acutely feel the loss. Meanwhile, United Technologies is far away, spending the profits they've made on the backs of the workers they've betrayed.

This sort of corporate irresponsibility has in recent years become more the norm than the exception. 4,500 machinist jobs have disappeared from the Springfield area in the last five years. Between Aug. 1983 and Nov. 1985, 218 Massachusetts plants have shut down, thowning 17,529 persons out of work. Nationally, 11.5 million workers have in the last five years lost their jobs due to plant closings. The jobs that sometimes replace these have been primarily in the service sector, which pay about half as much as manufacturing.

This trend is related to the acceptance of corporate greed that permeates America's shift to the right under Reagan. Politicians in state houses across the country have been tripping over each other in their rush to create a "pro-business environment." "Pro-business" is in this case a code word that means corporate tax shelters, low wages, freedom from union organizing and the freedom to leave at will. The politicians are courting the cash.

When a bill failed in the House that would have required industries to give 90 days notice of plant closings, 54 Democrats voted against it. Democratic representative Stanley Lundine explained, "Organized labor can no longer snap its fingers and expect Democrats to dance." Perhaps this says more about the Democrats than Lundine intended.

There are reasons for seat belts

I am very tired of hearing people gripe about the new seat belt law. It seems that the only issue people see in this legislation is "government intrusion" into our lives. I agree; the government has no right to prevent us from doing stupid things. We have a right to maim and kill ourselves if we so choose. But that's not the real point behind the seat belt law. From where I sit, the seat belt law is protecting my rights. I have a right to reasonably priced insurance, and the seat belt law protects that right.

Since it has been conclusively shown that the wearing of seat belts decreases the severity of automobile accidents, seat belt legislation has lowered the costs incurred by insurance writers, and hence the cost to consumers of automobile insurance has decreased. Therefore, by instituting the mandatory wearing of seat belts, the government is protecting and serving me.

Let us not forget that operation of a motor vehicle on public roads is a privilege, not a right. There are many mandatory safety measures with which we must comply in order to keep this privilege. Speed limits are the most obvious such restriction, but headlights, signal lamps, seat belts, safety glass and mandatory collision insurance are other important safety regulations. Is the requirement that you have working brakes an intrusion on your rights? Does anyone object to the use of safety glass in cars? Is mandatory collision insurance a bad thing? Of course not, and neither is the mandatory wearing of seat belts. Each of these safety measures is designed to make driving safer and less expensive for all users of public roads.

Sure, individuals have the right to maim and kill themselves, but the rest of us shouldn't have to pay for it.

Exercise caution with sources

I have read with interest in the Collegian of Feb. 5, that in the coming weeks the columns of contributors Steven Erickson and Peter Dow "will examine conflict in the Third World," which, Erickson wrote, is "perhaps (sic) the issue of the second half of this century."

Certainly, an informed understanding of what is happening in Third World countries today and its relationship to the United States, to world peace and to global harmony and progress is of the utmost importance. Consequently, any effort to contribute to an informed understanding of this central question is to be welcomed.

I suspect, however, that Erickson and Dow have access to most of the same print and electronic media information and opinion on the Third World that the rest of Americans, recently interested in this vast and diverse three-quarters of the world's population, have. So, I caution: that is not enough. Few Americans who have not had the opportunity of an extended, personal and physical exposure to and encounter with the Third World can begin to understand what is happening in the post World War II Third World. This is true not because of any inability to understand, but, because of the total failure of the U.S. media adequately, accurately and without bias to report on and interpret the Third World to the people of America.

I remind everyone that a primary function of a student newspaper is to provide the opportunity for students interested in the print media, in the actual practice of journalism, to produce the highest quality news writing and analysis of which they are capable. There is no harsher or more exacting homogeneous readership than the University community. You risk exposure and career jeopardy attempting, under the circumstance of the absence of accurate, in-depth and unbiased information, to explain, analyze and interpret a phenomenon of history as central in our times and to the future of the world as the North-South confrontations.

As you proceed read some history of the country or countries of which you are writing -- preferable history written by those countries' own historians. Do not take someone else's word for your facts. Check them out. Familiarize yourself with what Third World writers and analysts have to say. Avail yourselves of the Third World community on campus and in the Five-College area. Open yourselves to new and perhaps previously undreamed of concepts, ideals and ideas for more just and more equitable human societies than exists anywhere on this earth. And, above all else, let your love of all humankind guide you.

The enigma at ED/OP

I've been following the ED/OP section for about half a year now, and I've noticed that (over this time, anyway) the only Collegian columnist that consistently sparks anyones' response, really grinds anyones' guts, is this fellow named Rusty Denton. Apart from this I see only the same thing that I saw in so many other college newspapers in Berkeley, Santa Cruz, Santa Barbera, and San Diego. It is not ideological differences that set these two qualities of journalism apart, it is a sense of maturity and self respect.

When I take the time to read the editorial section, I can seldom overlook the monotone of aimless energy spattered in my face. And, usually in the name of some half baked, ill examined, unfelt "cause." There are, of course, exceptions, and I apologize to you who are actually living your lives and expressing your heartfelt beliefs. For you it might be wise to find another pad of paper. I am not in the position to say.

I feel a sense of pity for writes who feel they aren't "something" until they have taken up some kind of cause, chosen not out of love or compassion, but out of fear of being left out. However, I am more saddened for writers in general, who must deal with these immature, self-centered scavengers. I don't have to read ED/OP to see this attitude, I see many shades of it in the classes I teach. I can usually tell who is interested and not, who will need my help and not, and who will come to me complaining about their grade. I know this because I try to treat my students according to their needs (as opposed to whims and wants).

An editorial column should not be a power struggle. And, a power struggle for status is the most base of all. I have seen several promising articles from talented writers let go unprinted without so much as a phone call. Who do you thihk you're kidding? You are not the New York Times. Give a little!

I've heard that if you have something strong to say that you had better submit it as a "letter" lest it not be printed. I hope this will not be the case. I guess one could say that a tortoise who never sticks his head out of his shell will go on thinking that the world looks like the inside of a shell. I'm sticking my head out, and I hope you will too.

So, what is the enigma? It is the unfeeling who ignore the feeling, who in turn write about the unfeeling.

ARTS

June Millington will be performing tonight at the Iron Horse.

Queen Ida will be performing two shows, at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m., on Feb. 19 at the Northampton Center for the Arts.

live wire

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

There's a pretty good line-up of music this weekend and a nice variety for the rest of the week.

The Del Fuegos, the Stompers and Fantini are playing Saturday night at the Springfield Civic Center. The key is that the bands will play in the exhibition hall which should make it a more energetic show. The Del Fuegos and the Stompers are straight rock 'n roll without a lot of flash. Both bands are from Boston and both bands keep up the pace. The Del Fuegos add some rock-a-billy to their act. You can see the fuegos on a T.V. beer ad these days.

Fantini is a band from the area with talent. This band will fit in nicely on the bill.

At 7 p.m. tonight June Millington will play the Iron Horse in Northampton. Duke Robillard and the Pleasure Kings will follow her show. Millington has been played folk and rock with Holly Near, Barbara Streisand and Chris Williamson.

Also tonight at Sheehan's in Northampton is the Michael Gregory Band backed up by the Llamas. People tell me both bands are pretty hot.

Tomorrow night Archie Shepp will fill the Iron Horse with jazz.

Save some money for Wednesday when Queen Ida and the Bon Temps Zydeco Band come to the Northampton Center for the Arts. If you want something different this band will deliver. Zydeco is a musical cooked up in deep Louisiana filled with accordians and rhythm.

Tickets for the Golden Palominos go on sale tommorow at Datatix and the Fine Arts Center. The band will be performing March 6 in the Student Union Ballroom. The band has a list of members who play with the band on and off, including Michael Stipe of R.E.M., Carla Bley, and Chris Stamey of the dBs and lead singer of the Sex Pistols Johnny Lydon. Rumor has it that Stipe will appear at the S.U.B. show.

Visions of success

In the wake of a torrent of collaboration albums, the Golden Palominos, "Visions of Excess" must not get lost in the crowd. Bill Laswell, a producer much in demand, and the legendary percussionist Anton Fier form the foundation of the project.

The experimental nature of their project justifies the rather eclectic line-up of musicians. The final product is a "audio montage" of the artistic possibilities. Vocals include REM's Michael Stripe, and former Sex Pistol Johnny Lydon. Further complimenting the quality of the album are organist Carla Bley, Talking Heads keyboards player Bernie Worrell, guitarist/vocalist Richard Thompson, and vocalist and bass player for Cream, Jack Bruce. Impressive vocals are given by Syd Straw.

This is truly an album of excessive talent and artistic creativity, "Visions of Excess" should satisfy divergent musical tastes.

Characters add to F/X's effects

F/X (★★★) Starring Bryan Brown and Brian Dennehy Directed by Robert Mandel

By JIM COLE
Collegian Correspondent

FX takes a different look at the world of special effects men, and what might happen if their skills were put to use in the real world. The film stars Australian actor Bryan Brown (The Thorn Birds) as effects wizard Rollie Tyler, who is hired by the Justice Department to use his talents in a real life situation. In order for an ex-mafia boss to be taken into the Government's Witness Protection Program, Rollie is recruited to fake the man's assasination in a busy New York restaurant. But something is definitely amiss when the agents who hired Rollie try to kill him when the job is completed.

Although I am not familiar with Bryan Brown's work, he has great potential, and the film should make his name more familiar to American audiences. He is very convincing in his role, and he acts as if he's been working as an effects man for a long time. His knowledge comes in handy as he uses makeup and gadgets to fight back. Brian Dennehy (Cocoon) is very good as Detective McCarthy, a tough but friendly cop who gets the job done, rarely by the book.

The best thing about F/X is that despite some remarkable tricks, the film still centers on the story and believable characters. The continual double and triple crosses are often surprising, and all of Tyler's gadgets come in handy, especially in a scene where a Justice Department head has taken his gun. In response, Rollie claims, "I've got two things that you don't: the bullets for the gun, and a tube of crazy glue- good for 1000 uses." The glue effectively immobilizes the man, and the way simple objects are used in ingenious ways helps make the movie very entertaining.

ARTSLINES

By JENNIFER ACKERMAN
Collegian Staff

This is really the place to enrich yourself culturally. If you have a break between classes, why not go to a gallery and check out the art scene? Or, you can even make a Sunday or a Saturday interesting by visiting a museum at some of the Five Colleges. It never hurts a person to be exposed to a little ARTS. Here are a few suggestions:

University of Massachusetts:

Herter Gallery is now exhibiting the work of two women artists, Colleen Hayward and Suzanne Ulrich until Feb. 19.

The University Gallery is housing two shows. David Brush will give an informal talk about his exhibit called Cantos for an Accompanying Role on Tuesday Feb.25 at 2 p.m. Peter Shelton is also exhibiting his "Floatinghouse installation sculpture. Both artists will show their work until Mar.16.

Leonard Baskin will give a lecture on "Intrusion of Expression in Anatomical Atlases, 1540-1810" On Tuesday, Feb.18 at 8 p.m. in the School of Management, room 120.

Wheeler Gallery, located in Wheeler House, will open a new show of primitive-fired pottery called Africa Influences tonight from 5-7 p.m. The exhibit will run until Feb. 23.

Hampden Gallery is now exhibiting a unique collection of contemporary Chinese art. Shang-Shang Sheng, a UMass MFA student from Shanghai, China, curated the show during a return visit to China last summer. Look for an exhibit of Shang-Shang's own work sometime this year.

Smith College:

There will be a lecture by Robert Heinecken, a photographer, this friday, Feb. 14 at Graham Hall at 4:15 p.m. Reception will follow in the Museum.

Voices of Experience: The Black Women Oral History Project, a collection of photographs, is exhibiting in the Mair Catalogue Room of the Nelson Library until Mar. 8.

A Pre-Columbian Art exhibit called Olmec, Maya, Teotihuacan, and Aztec is a collection of a hundred objects selected by guest curator, G. G. Griffin of Princeton University.

Mount Holyoke College:

A collection of American Jewish artists will be exhibiting at the Museum. The collection formed by Jacob Shulman include such distinguished artists as: Ben Shahn, Max Weber, William Gropper, Elbert Weinberg, Jack Levine, and Leonard Baskin. This important exhibition will end Feb. 24.

Northampton Center for the Arts:

Phillip Lekki and Jamie Young, two artists leading the revival of "Impressionism", will exhibit through Feb. 23 in the East and West Galleries.

The Springfield Science Museum:

In celebration of Black History Month, Warren M. Robbins, Founding director of the National Museum of Africa Art in Washington, D. C., will deliver a lecture with a slide show on Sunday Feb. 23 at 2 p.m. Robbins established the first museum in the country devoted to traditional African sculpture in 1964, now a bureau of the Smithsonian and contains over 6,000 objects.

An exhibit of contemporary Chinese artists, curated by MFA student Shan-Shan Sheng, is now showing at Hampden Gallery.

University Placement Service Spring Recruiting Schedule

This list contains RESUME DUE DATES THROUGH MARCH 7. Resumes for open schedules may be turned in at the Whitmore sign-up desk from 9:00-3:00 Mondays & Tuesdays and at the University Career Center any day for pre-screened schedules. The Whitmore desk will also accept resumes for pre-screened schedules. Schedules will apppear in the COLLEGIAN every 2 weeks during the Spring semester. Last minute changes will be posted at the University Career Ctr., Whitmore sign-up desk and Campus Center Assistance desk. NEXT SCHEDULE WILL APPEAR ON FEBRUARY 27!

To use this schedule:

1. Select the companies with which you will request an interview.
2. If pre-screened(P) submit 2 resumes by the due date; resumes may go to the University Career Ctr. or Whitmore Sign-up desk(Mon-Tues 9:00-3:00)
3. If open(O) submit 1 resume on one of the due dates; these resumes MUST GO TO THE WHITMORE SIGN-UP DESK. IF YOU HAND IN MORE THAN ONE RESUME FOR COMPANIES COMING ON THE SAME DAY, YOU MUST CODE THE BACK WITH PRIORITY A,B,C, WITH A AS YOUR MOST IMPORTANT SELECTION
4. Each resume should be stamped with the information needed; stamps are available at the Whitmore sign-up desk and the University Career Center.
5. If a company has several job descriptions, you may have to indicate you preference. Always check the notebooks before handing in resumes.
6. Two weeks before the interview date the final schedule will be posted at the University Career Center, Whitmore sign-up desk and the Campus Ctr. Assistance desk. IT IS YOUR RESPONSIBILITY TO VERIFY YOUR APPOINTMENT TIME. If no list has been posted by 2 weeks before the interview date, you should check daily, since we add completed schedules for pre-screened companies as lists of selections are received from those companies.

Additional information on positions, locations, schedules etc. at the University Career Center and at the Whitmore Sign-up desk.

Canton Does And Doesn't Have Surplus

By Gerry deSimas Jr.

CANTON — Some unanticipated income and some careful spending have helped the town end up with a surplus just over a quarter of a million dollars — $255,000, for the fiscal year that ended June 30 — first selectman Samuel Humphrey said this week.

But a bill of about $179,000 owed to Blue Cross in connection with the town insurance, looms in the background.

The tax collector's office took in $73,000 more than it was budgeted due to payments of back taxes and liens. The town also received $16,000 from the state in road aid, and the town clerk's office added an extra $12,000 to the coffers.

A mild winter saved over $10,000 in plowing and overtime costs, and the Board of Education ($60,000), the Board of Selectmen ($160,000) and the ...

qualify yet but, Mullen might," Yarworth said. The coach's reasoning is that his swimmers aren't fully tapered whereas in diving tapering means nothing.

Another reason that Turner may not qualify is his ailing back as well as tendenitis in his shoulder, both of which have been holding him back all year. Also on the injury front are a couple of Minutemen recovering from the flu.

Even though Yarworth is not confident of winning the meet he has set some goals for this meet. "We want to bring down some times and swim smart races. Our whole training program is geared to the New England meet. It's impossible to prepare for two meets this close together," Yarworth said.

UMass will not be able to learn anything about any NE opponents because Rhode Island is the only common opponent in both the New England meet and this one.

The first day of events for UMass is as follows:

500 Freestyle - Rick Bishop, Drew Donovan, Mark Waters, Chris Payson, Jim Flannery, and Paul Hartnett.

Women's swimming cruises

UMass crushes Mount Holyoke, 82-57

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

What a difference a year can make.

The University of Massachusetts women's swim finished out its regular season with an 82-57 thrashing of Mount Holyoke on Tuesday night in Hadley.

The Minutewomen finished their duel meet season at 7-5, a vast improvement over the 3-9 year they suffered through in 1985.

"It was a great way to end the season, but we still have the New Englands coming up later this month (Feb. 21-23 at Maine)."

UMass had no double winners outside of Kris Henson, but had little trouble belting the overmatched women of Holyoke.

Winners for UMass included the 200 meter medley relay team, Henson in the 800 freestyle and Melissa Waller in the 100 breaststroke.

Other winners included Michelle Leary in the 200 meter butterfly and Henson with her second victory, this time in the 100 freestyle in 1:05.21.

Nancy Stephens took the 200 meter breaststroke in 3:03.07, it was Margaret Cameron in the 400 meter freestyle with a 4:34.25 and Sue Freitas won the 100 meter butterfly with a 1:14.77.

UMass swan unofficially in the final individual event, the 200 meter individual medley, or the score would have more or a rout.

The meet got so out-of-hand that diver Jean Cowen swam the anchor leg of the last relay, the 200 meter freestyle relay. UMass didn't score, but it didn't matter.

"It was pretty much what I expected, we beat them good last year and I knew we'd do the same this year," said Newcomb.

The Knights also shoot a cellar-dwelling 44 percent from the field and have been outscored by over seven points-per-game.

Riggins leads the Knights in scoring at 16 ppg (18 in the A-10). He is also their leading rebounder with just over five boards a game.

The Minutemen will be looking to establish their offense early in the game, taking the tempo to the Knights.

"We almost let the Penn State game get away," said gerlufsen, refering to Monday's 56-52 victory that saw UMass lead by 11 points in the second half but have to come back in the final two minutes to win.

"We lost our intensity in that game," said Gerlufsen. "We can't afford to do that against anyone, including Rutgers. I'm confident that we'll play hard from the opening tap against them."

Minuteman Mutterings: Sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton continues to lead UMass in scoring with 18.1 ppg (19.5 in the league). . .Smith is 24 assists away from tying the UMass career record of 518 .

seeing only 17 minutes of playing time due to foul trouble. Senior captain Jerrie Bernier led the Minutewomen in rebounds with a season-high eight boards.

Hebel's 11 points placed her as the second leading all-time scorer at UMass, surpassing Julie Ready's 1,406 points. Hebel now has 1,410 career points with five games remaining on the schedule.

The Minutewomen flew out of the gates early, jumping out to a 12-2 lead. But UMass lost its intensity and did not score for the next seven minutes, going into halftime knotted at 20-20.

The lack of consistency continued in the second half, as the Minutewomen sunk into another scoring drought midway through the second half. For the game, UMass shot a dismal 35 percent from the floor.

Foul trouble also spelled doom for the Minutewomen. Both Bernier and Matthews fouled out and Damminger with four personal fouls. Freshman point guard Christel Zullo picked up three quick fouls in the first half and only saw 21 minutes of playing time.

The Minutewomen return to the Cage Friday night to face Temple University. Game time is scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

Pat Doran 5-22, 275 RB/DB Mahwah, NJ Another team captain, Doran was all-league, county and area and honorable mention all-state. His team's MVP, Doran rushed for 1,275 yards and 20 TD's as a senior.

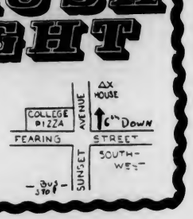
Mark Pompi 6-3, 240 OT Binghampton, NY A National Honor Society member as well as a hockey and lacrosse player, Pompi was all-metro and all-conference. An HRTA major, he choose UM over Holy Cross, Boston University, Temple, Maine and Delaware after a talk with HRTA director Stevenson Fletcher.

Steve Brothers 6-5, 245 DT Worcester, Mass. A Holy Name of Worcester product, Brothers is a blue-chipper that was a member of the Worcester Telegram all-star team as a senior. Played in the Shriners Game.

Tony Hunt 6-5, 245 DT Billerica, Mass. A transfer from Middlesex Community College, he will provide a quick-fix to the defensive line. "He's a project," said Reid. "He hasn't played in in over a year after leaving Lafayette as a freshman."

James Blount 6-3, 242 DT/OT Philadelphia, Penn. An all-Catholic League player 1983, 84 and 85. He was all-Philly in 85 as well as all-Montgomery in 83, 84 and 85. A legitimate player who could've played Division 1.

Greg Justave 6-4, 245 OG Throop, Penn. Never missing a practice or game in his career, this tough kid was a captain and all-county honorable mention player.



Al Pogarian 6-2, 255 OT Natick, Mass. A football and track captain for Natick's powerhouse, he was all-league and will play in the Shriner's game.

Paul Mayberry 6-2, 250 OT Waltham, Mas. A first-team Boston Herald all-scholastic, Mayberry will also play in the Shriner's game.

"It's hard to say now, but I feel good about this class," said Reid. "This is one of the finest groups of freshmen I've seen in a long time."

Linemen head recruiting class

Football freshmen a large group

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

First-year University of Massachusetts football coach Jim Reid started his administration off in the best way possible yesterday, signing a recruiting class that is the envy of much of Division 1-AA.

Linemen dominate the 17-member class. The Minutemen inked 12 high school players and one junior college transfer that project to be in the trenches either offensively or defensively.

With the loss of All-American nose guard Mike Dwyer to graduation and a poor job of recruiting big players last season, the need for linemen became apparent early in the recruiting process and Reid took over where Bob Stull left off before leaving for Texas-El Paso.

"It's a good class, several coaches from other teams have told me so," said Reid. "We have recruited players with good size and we hope good ability, but just as importantly they are qualified students, several in fact are honor students."

However, the leading player on the list released to the media yesterday morning is a running back. Jim Frank, a 5-10 185 pounder from Liberty High in Bethlehem, Penn. is a blue-chip member of the Eastern Penn. All-State team. He was also recruited by Penn State, Holy Cross and Delaware.

"Jim's a great player, without a doubt he can come in and contribute either as a back or in the secondary," said Reid. "Several Division 1 schools where after him, he's that good."

Here is a complete look at the 1985 UMass recruiting class:

Jim Frank, 5-10, 185 RB/DB Bethlehem, Penn. A member of the Eastern Penn. All-State team, Frank won the 100 and 200 meter dashes in the Eastern Penn League. A National Honor Society member, he was team captain and MVP.

Thorr Bjorn, 6-4, 235 DT East Lyme, Conn. A sure-fire all-name team member, this team captain was All-Eastern Conn. and all-area in 1985.

Joe Edgerton, 6-5, 265 OT/DT Warwick, RI At Bishop Hendricken High, Edgerton was first team Division 1A and all-state in track. He also played fullback for a game.

Paul Connor 6-4, 250 OT West Springfield, Mass. A two year captain, Connor is a big local product that was All-Western Mass. He is also an honor student.

Anthony Giudice 6-3, 245 OT Syosset, NY A two-year football captain, Guidice was first team all county, Long Island and Metro.

Mike Marzarella 6-4, 235 OT/DT Union, NJ A product of a football powerhouse, Marzarella hasn't played in a losing football game for two years. Played both lines on state champions and was first team all-county and third team all-state. He chose UM over West Virginia, Syracuse, James Madison and Purdue.

Mark Wojciechowski 6-0, 245 NG Sachem, NY A football captain, this kid's accomplishments would fill a page. The highlights: First team all-league, county and state, co-MVP of the state, an honorable mention All-American as well as all-country in track and wrestling.

Scott Alia 6-0, 175 RB/DB Saddlebrook, NJ A two-year captain and National Honor Society member, Alia was honorable men-

Rutgers — UM clash tonight

Hoop looks for 3rd straight win

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

There's a new attitude on the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, a winning one.

Coming off of two straight victories, the Minutemen will entertain Rutgers University tonight at 7:30 in the Curry Hicks Cage (plenty of free student seats available with an ID).

At 8-14 overall and in the middle of the Atlantic 10 pack at 5-8, the Minutemen realize now is the time to salvage their season and build a foundation for the future, as well as move up in the league and get position for the post-season A-10 tournament.

"It was really getting to us, losing all the time," said junior co-captain Carl Smith., "But now we've put two wins together and things are looking up. We want to keep it going."

Rutgers, 7-16 and 2-12, has lost seven straight and despite several talented players, is mired in last place in the Atlantic 10. Rookie head coach Craig Littlepage has had his problems, but believes he can beat UMass.

The Scarlet Knights defeated UMass, 73-62 back on Jan. 16 in New Jersey. Eric Riggins, a 6-8 junior foward, scored 19 points and along with huge (6-9, 265 pounds) junior center Lloyd Moore, ruled the inside.

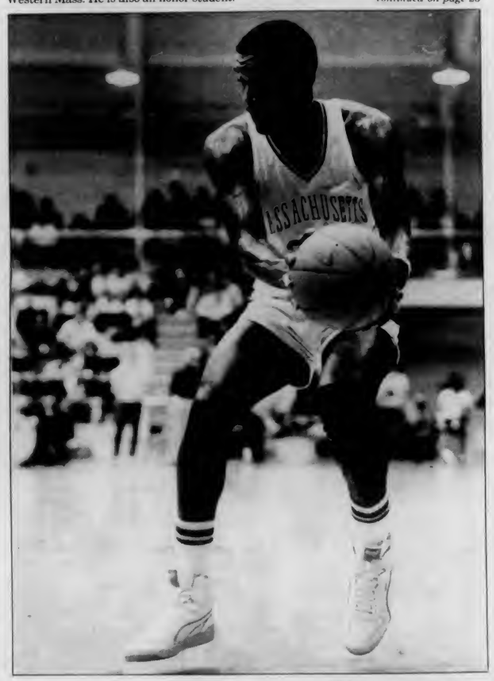
But Littlepage has sinced benched that duo and Rutgers has gone into a tailspin. The Minutemen have since improved, especially their inside game.

Freshman center John Milum, who had played in just five games prior to the team's first meeting, is now a starter and playing well. Freshman forward Duane Chase, who was having personal problems at the time, is now making his presence felt and is a force in the paint.

"Rutgers is dangerous, forget their record," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "I'm sure their coming in here thinking they can beat us, but we're going in thinking we can beat them too."

A sign of UMass' new attitude is the suspension of freshman forward Joe Fennell. The disciplinary move is a clear signal to the rest of the team, especially the freshmen, that their coach wants good efforts on the court, and good behavior off it. Or else.

"I had to draw the line," said the coach. "Hopefully everything will work out the better for it."



Against Rutgers' inside game (becuse Moore and Riggins are quick to come off the bench), UMass will need good play from Milum, Chase and reserve centers Tom Emerson and Sean Mosby.

Neither player has developed into a great scoring threat, but are both capable of solid defense and the glass and rebounding.

"We'll need Tommy and Sean," said Gerlufsen. "They've been in a little competition lately to see who will play. Sean's been hurt (ankle), but he can see action."

Rutgers shows a little of everything. They can press and run depending on their personal, but they are awaful on defense, allowing a league-low 50 percent from the

Minuteman swimmers travel to Atlantic 10 championship

By JOE ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team, at this very moment, is competing in the Atlantic 10 Conference championship meet at Penn State University.

UMass, 11-0 during the regular season, hopes to place anywhere from third to fifth in the three-day meet.

"If we prepared for the meet (trained to peak for it) then I'd hope for third." said UMass coach Russ Yarworth. "Penn State and West Virginia will probably be first and second. Temple and George Washington will peak for the meet plus St. Bonaventure should be tough.

Although the Minutemen aren't training for the meet, they will swim a strong line-up. "We'll swim pretty much the same way as we'll swim at New Englands, except three for people," Yarworth said. Paul Hartnett earned one of those positions with a good performance against New Hampshire last Saturday. Eric Bebchick and Owen McGonagle are the others.

Yarworth also noted that John Turner and Drew Donovan can still qualify for nationals as well as Pat Mullen can in diving.

"I don't expect Donovan or Turner to

Minutewomen fall at GW, 61-46

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

Just when you thought that things couldn't get any worse, the problems continue to mount for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team.

In addition to Monday's 61 46 loss at the hands of George Washington University in the nation's capitol, the Minutewomen added two more players to the ever-growing injury list. Chalk up freshman forward Beth Wilbor with a pulled groin suffered in practice last week and junior guard Mary Marquedant, who has been slowed by a charley horse she also received in practice.

The loss at GW was the third straight for the Minutewomen (9-13 overall and 2-9 in the Atlantic 10) and the eighth loss out of the last nine contests. It was also the eighth consecutive loss in the A-10 for UMass.

Seniors Barbara Hebel and Karen Damminger led UMass with 11 points each. Senior forward Rebecca Kucks and senior guard Juanita Mathhews added 10 and eight points respectively, with Matthews

Collins; UMass deserves more

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' budget request for the University of Massachusetts does not help further the goals of the University, a state representative told the Faculty Senate yesterday.

The request is "not a bad budget recommendation," but it is "not one that really helps us or enables us to realize the promise of this land grant University," State Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, said in his address to the senate.

University officials had expressed disappointment at Dukakis' budget request.

The University requested an increase of $2.1 million in its main budget and an $18 million allocation for new programs. Dukakis has asked the Legislature for a $1.5 million increase in the base budget and no funding for new programs.

To "turn good education into good politics on Beacon Hill," the University needs to develop long-term plans for its future, he said.

"We won't get the money unless we do the planning," he said. "Institutional change doesn't occur if it's dictated from a Legislature or a board of regents."

Collins said he intends to "develop broad-based support for the additional funding" to the budget. He said he hoped support would come from UMass alumni, faculty, and students.

The University has the single largest alumni delegation in the state Legislature, surpassing private institutions, such as Harvard and Boston College for the first time, he said.

"I want us to be an elite school that's not elitist," he said.

In other senate business, Samuel F. Conti, vice-chancellor for research and dean of the graduate school, said that a graduation ceremony for graduate students will be held in the Fine Arts Center on May 24. This is one day before the undergraduate graduation, May 25, in Warren McGuirck Alumni Stadium.

Apts. sprayed; no warning

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Correspondent

The director of the Office of Environmental Health and Safety said he is concerned about a violation of University of Massachusetts pesticide regulations

Al Sorenson, the department's director who ensures that pesticide violations are not made, said "we're definitely concerned," although he added he thinks no intentional infraction occurred.

Sorenson said he is concerned because signs were not posted in hallways and common areas warning University Apartment Complex residents that spraying was to take place. The spraying was done Wednesday afternoon and yesterday morning at the apartments located on North Pleasant Street near the Newman Center

Regulations issued by Sorenson's office state that within two working days before apartments are fumigated, "there shall be a posting in prominent areas of the buildings) to be treated," warning of the upcoming pesticide use.

There were no signs in place at the apartments Wednesday afternoon or yesterday morning.

Gary Cichasky, housing officer for the University and Lincoln Apartment complexes, said he understood the regulation to mean that signs should be posted on apartment doors after the spraying has taken place.

The spraying for cockroaches in the apartments was part of a regular program of fumigation of campus residences carried out by the grounds section of the Physical Plant Department. The complex houses the families of University students who are parents.

"They (the signs) definitely should be there," said Sorenson. "It was agreed to with the physical plant department." He said his office had supplied physical plant with the signs.

The regulations also state that "In areas treated for cockroach control, the occupants must be given a copy of 'Control of the Cockroach'," a flyer issued by the University's Environmental Health Office. None of the residents interviewed yesterday had received a copy. However, several residents said they did receive a family housing newsletter which periodically contains cockroach control information.

"I'd like everyone to get copies," said Sorenson. But he added that residents are made aware of procedures for insect control.

The regulations state that residents must receive notification individually of the spraying. These written notices must tell what chemicals are to be used, how long residents must stay out of their apartments, and any recommended safety procedures.

It appeared that these regulations had been followed accordingly. Every resident interviewed had received copies of the notice, and several were seen stuck into apartment doors.

However, Sorenson, emphasizing the importance of prior warning, said "The main thing is to be sure that everybody is notified." He said he would contact the Physical Plant Department to make sure the advance warning signs are posted in the future.

Students save groups' funds

University of Massachusetts students overwhelmingly approved to continue the support of two student advocacy groups by means of an optional $3 fee on each semester's tuition bill.

With all but some 200 absentee ballots counted, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) and the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM) clinched the victory with a margin of more than 3 to 1.

The unbinding referendum, held yesterday and Wednesday, asked students whether they supported the "negative check-off" system, in which $3 in fees--$2 for MassPIRG and $1 for SSAM--are automatically accessed unless a waiver is filled out and the amount subtracted from the total tuition.

Students answered with 2,106 in favor of the system, and 603 against.

Dierdre Cummings of MassPIRG said she was happy with the result. "I think it shows that students care about us. It reaffirms our position among students," she said.

Brian Darling of Students for Participatory Democracy, which iniated the referendum, said his group accomplished their goals by making students more aware of the automatic fee assessment.

"It was definitely a consciousness-raising campaign," he said.

Darling said SPD would set their sights on another issue rather than re-challenge MassPIRG and SSAM.

Karen Morvay, chairwoman of the Undergraduate Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, said she was pleased with the voter turnout of 15 percent.

"It shows apathy is decreasing on campus," she said.

Editor's note: First in a series of health-related articles.

February seems to be the most popular time for influenza to strike and as a result, University of Massachusetts Health Services is offering information and services to help students combat this virus.

The beginning of the spring semester is the most typical time of the year for flu, but fortunately this year doesn't seem to be as bad as others, said Estelle Maartmann-Moe, director of nursing at UHS.

The flu lasts for about five to seven days accompanied with common symptoms, she said. Most people have had respiratory problems, headaches, sore throat, and fever with temperatures up to 103 degrees.

Flu is highly contagious and people are usually carriers of the virus before they realize it. Maartmann-Moe advises washing your hands often and keeping sneezing and coughing "to yourself," because flu is an air-born virus.

A cool, damp cloth on the forehead and Tylenol help reduce fever and achiness, she said. She advises people to get enough rest and drink enough fluids, usually 6 to 8 glasses of water per day.

"There have only been two or three people in the past two weeks admitted into the in-patient care unit for severe flu symptoms, such as dehydration," she said. The clinicians at the center's Urgent Care Unit see about 25 to 30 people a day for flu.

Not everyone needs to see a clinician, she said. There is a self-care cold center next to the pharmacy inside the infirmary with informative pamphlets and a symptom check-list.

The self-care cold center is there to help students find out if they really need to see a clinician or if they only need over-the-counter medicine from the pharmacy, said Kathy Crosson, director of health education at UHS.

"Word of mouth is that it (flu) is there, people are sick," said Joe Pelis, director of the pharmacy at UHS.

By IAN POLUMBAUM

The Collegian will lose the full-time services of a family member today when James Ristuben, coordinator in the newspaper's business office for seven years, leaves his position for health reasons.

Ristuben, 57, came to the Collegian in 1979, bringing nearly three decades of experience in the business, advertising and circulation departments of professional newspapers in North Dakota, Massachusetts and New York.

His job here has been to work with the Collegian's business managers in coordinating advertising, finances, circulation, subscriptions and the newspaper's accounts.

Manufacturer removes Tylenol from shelves

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.(AP)- A second bottle of cyanide-laced Tylenol was found on a store shelf yesterday, prompting its manufacturer to issue a nationwide warning not to use the painkiller in capsule form.

Federal officials said the second contaminated bottle was not from the same batch that figured in the death of a woman last weekend.

"We found cyanide in it," said Food and Drug Administration Director George Gerstenberg of the second bottle. "It was taken off the shelf, it had not been sold."

Westchester County officials said it was taken from a Woolworth's store a few blocks from the A&P where the first bottle had been purchased. Gerstenberg would not confirm where the second bottle was found.

Johnson & Johnson, the maker of Tylenol, said in a statement, "While the area of immediate concern is New York, we are issuing a nationwide warning in the interest of giving the public the widest possible protection."

Diane Elsroth, 23, of Peekskill, died Saturday at the Yonkers home where her boyfriend, Michael Notarnicola, lived with his parents and brother.

Stephen Lewis, a lawyer for the Notarnicola family, said yesterday he had been assured by the FBI and Yonkers police "that no one in the family is a suspect."

Elsroth's death prompted thousands of stores nationwide to pull the painkiller off the shelves and recalled the 1982 death of seven Chicago area residents who died after taking cyanide-tainted Tylenol.

The family "has absolutely nothing to hide," Lewis said. "They want to see the person responsible apprehended and prosecuted."

Assembly: Marcos is ahead

MANILA, Philippines (AP)- President Ferdinand E. Marcos was well ahead yesterday in the official vote count by the National Assembly, which his party controls. Corazon Aquino, who claims she won the election, said he must resign to prevent violence.

Aquino's aides reported that another of her campaign workers was killed yesterday bringing the total since the Feb. 7 presidential election to more than 20.

After seven hours of tabulating tally sheets from the archipelago's 74 provinces and more than 60 cities, the assembly had Marcos ahead with 6,403,785 votes to 5,584,581 for Aquino. That gave Marcos an edge of about 53 percent to Aquino's 46 percent with about 46 percent of the votes tallied.

The assembly's count determines the outcome under Philippine law.

The National Movement for Free Elections, an independent poll-watchers group called Namfrel, had Aquino ahead in its unofficial count. It gave her 7,158,679 votes to 6,532,362 for Marcos, based on 64 percent of more than 86,000 precincts reporting.

Aquino claims the elections were fraudulent and the National Assembly's canvass is rigged.

She said the president should resign because "the failure of the electoral process to move swiftly to a fair conclusion has dangerously heightened tensions." An aide read her statement soon after a Marcos government television broadcast.

U.S. declares mutual fraud

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP)- The Reagan administration refused yesterday to elaborate on President Reagan's suggestion that instances of fraud and violence in the Philippine elections occurred on both sides.

"Don't have anything further from what the president said," White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said. "The president said what he said and that's the U.S. view."

Reagan's comments of Tuesday night have been interpreted by some in the Philippines as an endorsement of Marcos.

But Speakes said yesterday: "Any interpretation of the president's statement was done by the press and not by the president."

Anxious about future? Job center may help

By JOHN C. SHEEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

Spring semester for many University of Massachusetts students is a time to watch lacrosse games and go to spring concerts, but for seniors it is often marked by tension and confusion over what comes after graduation.

Fortunately, the University Career Center can help smooth the transition from college to the working world, according to Arthur L. Hilson, director of University Placement Services.

The center, located in Fraternity-Sorority Park, helps students enter the job market through resume writing seminars, interviewing workshops, and a computerized job referral service.

Hilson said 6,097 interviews were conducted at the center last semester, twice the 1983 figure, and next year more than 500 recruiters should use the center.

About one-half of the class of 1985 used the center, but he would like to increase that number, he said.

In today's job market, engineering majors have an advantage, Hilson said.

"Sixty-seven percent of the recruiters coming to campus are looking for engineers...it's the reality," he said. "There are lots of liberal arts majors out there, so they [the companies] are looking for the cream of the crop." But the center is trying to attract more employers who are looking for liberal arts majors.

"We are trying to show liberal arts students there are alternatives, although there are not as many companies on campus looking for liberal arts students, they should come in and talk to a counselor to develop a strategy," Hilson said.

Hilson said he thinks the new center is one of the best in the country, and recruiters seem to agree.

"Most of the employers who come here say we have one of the finest facilities and best-run programs they have seen," he said.

Students using the center are also impressed.

"It's helpful because there are counselors for the different majors. They bring a lot of companies here that anybody can interview with, if they have the initiative to come up here," said Rachel Lovett, a senior hotel, restaurant and travel administration and French major.

Located within the center is the University Placement Service, the Veterans Assistance and Counseling Service and the Cooperative Education Program. Each year, the Placement Service brings hundreds of companies and government agencies to the University to recruit students.

The Career Center is not just for students entering the workforce. For students interested in graduate school, it provides counseling and a credential file for recommendations. Each fall, Placement Services also sponsors a graduate and professional school fair which brings approximately 100 companies to the University.

Hilson said he believes one of the best things about the center is the computerized referral service provided for life to graduates. If a graduate wants to change careers after 10 years, he or she can receive job listings and counseling from the center.

These services provided by a private employment agency would cost from $500 to $1,500. Some private companies will charge 10 percent of a client's first-year salary, he said.

Lynne Darlington, a senior communications major said, "The center has so much. There's lots of information. They have everything."

Students may attend information sessions on weekdays, except Wednesdays, at 9 a.m., in Room 110A at the center.

Office manager fascinated by gutsy outfit

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

Frances M. Cramer-Hanafee may have started her new job as the office manager for the Student Government Association just a few, short weeks ago, but she's no stranger to the University.

Cramer-Hanafee was hired last December to replace the retiring Eunice Konieczny, who had held the job for 25 years. She feels she has big shoes to fill.

"Eunice was the end all and the be all," Cramer-Hanafee said, but she seems to stepped into the position quite well. Cramer-Hanafee says being office manager involves typing, answering the phone, aiding students and staff, and remaining neutral by showing no opinions on in-house politics.

"I have definite opinions, but I keep my mouth shut."

Cramer-Hanafee began working for the University five years ago for Dr. William Tunis, then associate dean for the College of Food and Natural Resources in Stockbridge Hall. She worked there for two and a half years and for the past 19 months was a receptionist and "jack-of-all-trades" for the food science and nutrition department in Chenoweth Hall.

Because there was no room for promotion at her job, she said, she sent her application to the personnel office. Although she said she likes working in the student government "some days are better than others.

WOMEN ON CAMPUS

"I seethe on the inside and say very little," she said. "Once in a while, I lose my cool." Working in student government is very different than working for the food science department. "Here I see the sheer number of students. I never saw all 25,000 students at once--I was oblivious to all people."

Kramer-Hanafee said she is fascinated with how the SGA works, describing it as a "gusty outfit." It is a study in contrasts-- "busy, dizzy, interesting, dull, political, analytical, calm, frenzied, flurries, and slumps," she said.

She added that she is fascinated by discussions that occur around the office. "I'm interested in the way minds work. The people here are much more aware."

She described herself as following in her mother's footsteps. When her mother was in her late 60s she broke her hip, but she went to the state capital for a women's cause anyway. When a reporter saw her he stopped her, she turned to him and said "I'd rather be known as a wrinkled radical than an old girl."

Cramer-Hanafee said, "When I first got here I didn't even know how to plug in an electric typewriter." As she said herself, "I've come a long way, baby."

BOG votes to halt deck installations

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night voted unanimously to stop the installation of the tape decks in the Music Reading Room and remove those which are already set in place.

"One of the specifications we wanted in the tape decks was a volume control knob," Mark Freidman, special projects coordinator of the board said.

A list of qualifications for the tape decks, which were installed in January, were given to each bidding company before they were ordered.

Gamma Industries, who sold the equipment to UMass, did not include a volume control knob or service contract with the decks.

"Building Operations, to cover over their mistake, ordered volume-tenuating headsets which you can only turn down the volume knobs, they won't increase," Freidman said.

"They were found to be so inefficient they were sent back," he said.

"They (Building Operations) then looked into ordering Sony units which are delicate and not serviceable and expensive at $50 to $60 a shot," Freidman said.

The Board voted to stop the purchase order of the volume controlled headsets and to discontinue the installation of the tape decks. Nine units have been put in and 12 are in storage.

The board also decided the equipment should be installed by putting brackets over the decks instead of opening up the back of the units which violates the warranties.

The action will be discussed with a representative from the Audio Visual Center in the Campus Center. The board decided not to ask that any action be taken against Gamma Industries.

Comet hotline now available

10,000 call in toll free

By STEPHEN JOYCE
Collegian Correspondent

Massachusetts residents and Halley's Comet followers have until late spring to take advantage of a toll-free service established by researchers at the University of Massachusetts which gives information about the location of the comet.

The toll-free number was set up in the University's Office of Public Information when astronomy professor William Irvine and F. Peter Schloerb of the physics and astronomy department suggested the idea.

"Halley's Hotline" is available to residents of Massachusetts, and contains recorded information about the comet's history and current location.

Graduate student Gerald Moriarity-Schieven is the spokesman for the service. Each week he updates the information unless circumstances require earlier revisions.

So far, 10,000 people have called the number, Arthur Clifford, director of the information office said. During November, when the comet was visible with binoculars, 3,000 people called.

"The researchers at the University are concentrating on the area of collecting radiowave information on the comet. Irvine said the results will be published to provide a complete record. He said he expects the results to be released by 1989.

The comet is now on the other side of the sun, "which makes it virtually impossible to see from the earth using regular optical telescopes," Moriarity-Schieven said.

Soviet Jews face hardships

By BETH ANNE PASTINO
Collegian Correspondent

Oppression is more common toward Jews than other minorities in the Soviet Union, according to a University of Massachusetts student who spent four months in the USSR last spring.

Stacy Gardner, a senior studying Russian language and literature and Soviet and East European studies, said at a lecture this week in the Student Union Building that "racism in the USSR is directed mostly toward Jews."

Gardner spent four months studying in the Soviet Union last spring through The American Council of Teachers of Russians Program, sponsored by Bryn Mawr College in Pennsylvania.

"Jewish children are harrassed and beaten at school," she said.

Synagogues in the Soviet Union are very formal and very stifled, Gardner said. "There is nothing very personal in it [the Jewish religion] like there is here," Gardner said.

However, she said, Soviet Jews do congregate privately to celebrate holidays. Gardner attended a Purim celebration [a joyous feast celebrated in March] that was "very secretive and kept quiet," she said.

Among the people Gardner met, she said, was a Jewish woman who had been applying for an exit visa for three years and was repeatedly denied. The woman "did not lose her job, nor experience a cut in pay because she wished to leave the country," Gardner said. She was simply denied.

"People are free to go to a synagogue, yet if they go regularly, people believe that they are attending merely to prove that they are religious so that they will be granted a visa," she said.

She said Soviet Jews want to preserve their religion and culture in the country -- and that they do not want everyone to leave.

"They get propaganda about an America that is violent and dangerous like we get information that Russia is gray and boring," she said.

UNITED TECHNOLOGIES IS LOOKING FOR ANOTHER CURIE.

When you spend four years cooking eight tons of pitchblende down to a single gram of radium, that's perseverance.

Perseverance, and the confidence to know when you're right, and the courage to keep going.

We'd like to find a few more people like that.

We have a lot to offer in exchange. As a worldwide group of companies, with galaxy-wide interests, we have room for tons of raw materials and time for years of patience. And sometimes it seems almost everyone here's an engineer, right up to the top, so we speak your language.

We're the world's largest maker of helicopters, aircraft engines, elevators, escalators, and air conditioners. There's always something cooking in spacesuits or fiber optics. We're at the center.

Check us out. Stop in at the campus placement office, or write for more information to: United Technologies Corporation, P.O. Box 1379, Hartford, CT 06143.

Reject union's latest ploy

Dave Nelson

The union Local 217 has finally gone too far. The picketing of Eric Nusbaum's class (HRTA 291A) is an act of desperation and lacks any justification besides vindictiveness.

As a former union member at the Jeff and until it's closing, a member of management, I take offense to the new low the union has reached. Regardless of what the membership of the union chooses to believe, the Jeff is closed and it will not re-open. It may re-open some day in the future, but it won't be the same Inn in more ways than one. Why can't certain individuals wake up to reality and live by the consequences of their action and decisions?

It makes no difference to these picketers that the union negotiating team would not allow the whole membership to vote on the final proposal.... even though that would have at least made their actions democratic. Instead Rob Traber (union director) can make false proclamations in public that he had the unanimous support of the workers. Has anyone noticed that Rob Traber is one of the few whose job was not jeopardized by his unwillingness to compromise? Has it occured to anyone that the Jeff may have been a sacrifical lamb so the union could generate publicity via controversy to aid it's drive in other area establishments and institutions?

If the union had been operating in the best interests of the workers (rather than its own political interests) 80 people would still be employed with the best wage and benefit package of any hotel/restaurant in the valley.

The union made decisions and Amherst College made decisions. Both sides operated within carefully constructed legal parameters. If the Lord Jeff's management had done anything illegal, it would have been substantiated during the review by the National Labor Board. The lies and half-truths spread by union hysteria communicated via picket signs, slanted news coverage and incorrect hand-outs successfully clouded the issues at hand. When you back your opposition into a corner at the very begining of a dispute and use a strategy of slander and hatred, diplomatic solutions are next to impossible. If the union had spent as much time and/or effort trying to create realistic alternatives, as they did with creating hype and spreading misinformation, we might all still have our jobs.

As for the rumors that Eric Nusbaum had been hired as a hatchetman by Amherst College and offered bonuses for unionbusting, they originate from the same people who claim we taped knives to the hands of our cooks who were too overworked to hold them any longer. Eric had to make decisions that cost him his job as well. Despite the union's behavior, he has displayed compassion for the displaced worker, writing references for people who slander his name and even got one person (who used to parade outside his window wishing him dead publicly) a job at the University. There are many others who were given second chances or done favors that they've seem to have forgotten very quickly and very handily. (I remeber the names, but will spare those people humiliation unless pushed by more of this behavior.)

I will never apologize for having been a manager at the Lord Jeffrey Inn, nor should Eric be harassed for having been one either. The Jeff gave its employees better treatment than any of its competitors by far. I am disappointed by some of my friend's behavior of late. I support their right to have opposed our positions and their refusal to settle. However, I cannot accept their continuing strategy of character assasination. They should question their own leadership which led them down the path to unemployment.

I am glad students rejected this latest ploy and are giving Nusbaum a chance to share his knowledge of the industry. I respect Dr. Fletcher's support of Nusbaum's crudentials and I am grateful he was willing to face this situation rather than reject Nusbaum's services. Nusbuam will be an asset to the HRTA department.

It surprises me that the union is embracing the same tactics as the right-wing Accuracy in Academia -- classroom intimidation. I thought they were above that.

Dave Nelson is a former management member of the Lord Jeffrey Amherst Inn.

Appreciating who we are Happy Chinese New Year! It is the year 4684 -- the year of the Tiger.

It is a time to be with family and loved ones; a time to pay respect to my parents and wish them good fortune and longevity.

For me, it is also a time to reflect. When I first came to America from Hong Kong many years ago, I was very scared.

Not only was I in a strange land, but also I had to adapt to new customs and traditions. The hardest part was to accept the fact that I am not "American." I am Chinese, but I also wanted to be American.

There were times when I wanted to disavow my Asain heritage, especially when American schoolmates made fun of my skin color and Chinese accent. I wondered, "Why can't I be American, and be able to blend in with the majority of this country?"

As I grew older, however, I learned that being Chinese is something I can be very proud of. There is a long line of history connected with Chinese people; the many different cultures, customs and traditions. The many different dialects (my own being Cantonese) of the Chinese language share a common form -- the written form.

Perhaps I have been rambling on, but my main point is that I am proud to be who I am, especially during this festive time of the year. Everybody should be just as proud of their own heritage, whether it be Chinese, Black, Italian, or Japanese. Whenever anybody asks me what race I am, I proudly reply that I am Chinese foremost, and American secondly.

As my parents would say, "Gung Hay Fat Choy!" (Wishing you happiness and good fortune in the coming New Year!)

A very revealing headline

Anne McCrory

You'd think, after 10 semesters at UMass, I would have encountered every conceivable hair-raising situation that is appropos to a college education.

I've overslept exams. Failed courses. Been told I couldn't pre-register. Found myself on the bad check list. Watched friends gleefully graduate, leaving me on my own once more. Panicked at the thought of leaving without a degree, and now, panicked at the prospect of facing the real world. But these episodes dim in comparison with the latest cause of turmoil, one which I never anticipated, and worse, can do nothing about.

Today, while performing that prosaic procedure most of us think nothing about (combing my hair), I saw with horror the coming of Old Age. That's right: I have a white hair.

If it were gray, that would be one thing. Gray is a sign of maturity, of middle age. White is the point of no return. Not to denegrate those of you older people on campus who have white (or gray) hair, I have to say I was simply shocked. It is only one strand of hair, to be sure, but whence one has come, others are sure to follow. All this, at age 22, six days away from my 23rd birthday.

That fact in itself is poignant. I already feel decades older than my "peers," having chosen to prolong my undergraduate years beyond the ordinary four -- and in so doing, discovering that I am no longer really of a college mindset, that the antics of college students cease to amuse me, that I feel infinitely older than my numerical age suggests. Being 21 was special -- it was one of those rare turning points in life that one has cause to celebrate; 22 was a real letdown in comparison. Maybe if 22 had been more exciting I wouldn't feel so geriatric; maybe if 23 promised to be more than a step closer to 30, I wouldn't feel so depressed.

But back to the subject at hand: my white hair. Big deal, most of you are saying, it's unlikely that anyone will even notice it, and with today's hair styles, some may even think it's intentional. That may be true. But it's there. It's not like other signs of aging to which one can apply corrective measures: a little Oil of Olay for the wrinkles, some calcium to ward off the osteoporosis, a few sit-ups to fend off the flab. White hair is permanent (especially if, like me, you have that enviable shade of red hairdressers say they've been trying to imitate for years -- with no success) and, especially with all this worrying, it only promises to get worse.

I have had offers to solve this crisis in the short term, but I've declined them, not seeking confirmation of the old adage that when one hair is plucked, two others will grow in its place -- sort of like, "Two paths diverged in a yellow wood..." by Robert Frost. That's all about the road not taken -- something I'd rather not contemplate at this point in my life.

Maybe, just maybe, 23 is more of a turning point than I thought.

Most dangerous drinkers

Herb Ramy

No matter how many rules and regulations are set up by this University, we all know that alcohol plays a role in our lives here. Even if you don't drink, the drinking of others affects you in some way. This being the case, I think it's time we all looked at ourselves and decided what kind of drinkers we are. While some may disagree, there are basically three types of drinkers here at UMass, and, in general, throughout the world.

The first group consists of those who try to convince us that they have drunk more than they actually have. Now don't misunderstand me. A person who holds the same drink for an entire night does not bother me. He or she usually just doesn't want to feel out of place. The problem begins when this same person professes that they've been drinking all night. To prove their point, they will often show you a dozen empty beer bottles. Little do you know that this person hase been sneaking off to the bathroom every so often to dump out a portion of a beer. Not only is this deceitful, it's a waste of alcohol.

The second type of drinker is the one who will drink for any reason at all. For instance, a day of the week with a "Y" is enough provocation for these people. Contrary to popular belief, these are not our most destructive drinkers. After drinking for so long, their minds have become too numbed to perform at all. These are the people you might see vegetating in front of Sesame St. at four in the afternoon with a half finished bottle of vodka in their hands. For the most part this type of drinker is harmless. Trouble only occurs during feeding time. Bystanders have lost limbs when placing them too close to the drinkers plate.

Our final type of drinker is our most dangerous, and a confusing one. Confusing, because from Sunday through Thursday these are our most trustworthy citizens. Often times they will even refuse a Coke during the week because of the caffeine involved, but come Friday their entire outlook changes. You might find this drinker pouring Rice Krispies on the floor in order to walk through them in bare feet -- the sensation being quite interesting.

These drinkers have also been known to urinate off of balconies to prove the theory of gravity to a friend. "See, I told you everything goes down." This will also be the same person who professes to drive better when he or she is drunk. Sure they may be able to drive better, but by this time walking has become a severe problem. A broken leg is quite common in the trip from the dorm to the car. It seems that these active minds need a more intense than usual break from the week's studying, or writing of Collegian columns.

Now is time to decide what kind of drinker you are. What kind am I you might ask. Well, let's put it this way -- I'm still trying to pick Rice Krispies from between my toes.

Oppression is a hard reality here

I'm disgusted. Lest anyone think that gay people are not oppressed on this campus; Wednesday and Thursday I was distributing table tents in the Campus Center for the LBGA Valentine's Day Dance. Some people said, "Thank you," but others chose to either turn them inside out or crumple them up. Only a few hours later, most of the table tents were gone, as was the case with our dance posters, as well.

Perhaps gay people should stop seeking the respect of the general public and instead realize that the general public is less than worthy of our respect.

Letters from the editor

I don't know about everyone else, but I received two great gifts this week -- an SGA key ring, and a Student Affairs fine point marker wtih rainbow cap. Of course, the administrative effort outdoes the student effort.

Whereas the key ring soberly includes the SGA phone and office number, the pen includes the caption "We make it happen." That statement qualifies as an absolute truth. Look soon for Collegian embossed typewriters, BOG swizzle sticks, and Dukakis double-edged axes.

I think I may be a little slow here, but I just noticed that five of the 10 SGA Budgets Committee members are also listed as staff on the Minuteman. That committee determines RSO funding, provided Madson and Donant approve.

I can't imagine, though, that the Minuteman will seek SGA funding -- every issue they print should bring in more conservative foundation money, and from what I hear, there's a lot of money to be had.

Still cleaning up loose ends, former Chancellor John Duff wrote another angry rebuke to a newspaper piece, this time to the Boston Phoenix. It reads like a form letter he's drafted, including a laundry list of his claimed achievements, an arrogant denial of any wrongdoing, and little mention of the results of the investigation into his involvement with political fundraising and misappropriation of computer funds.

The TOC has relented a bit. The bouncers are accepting out of state driver's licenses with UMass IDs. They write down the address, and out of staters sign their name. This is an even-handed response to the innumerable hassles they faced with out of state students last week.

It appears this will be the first year that the University will split up commencement ceremonies. The plan now is to hold undergraduate commmencement at Alumni Stadium this spring, as usual. Graduate commencement, however, will be held the day before at the Fine Arts Center.

One aspect that remains unchanged is that administrators are taking a hard line on alcohol consumption at the ceremonies, as well they should. Alcohol use seems to be increasing during the ceremonies and administrators are stressing that students should enjoy a dignified and joyful ceremony without going overboard.

The misused power of the media

I feel very resentful towards individuals who misuse the power of the media. More specifically, cartoonists for the Collegian, who use their position to inflict their prejudices on other people.

I direct these remarks to Dowe and O'Brien of Freaker Patrol. Last Monday, they ran a contest in their strip, in which one of the rules was that all human beings would be eligible (no frat boys). They insinuated that fraternity men are not human beings. One can only deduce from their statement that fraternity men are of a lower life form. I was very offended by these cartoonists.

Humor is a necessity of life for students and faculty on this campus. It is my opinion that people need five or 10 minutes to sit down and read the Collegian comics, if not to crack a smile and laugh but rather to break up the monotony of the day. They should not have to pick up a paper and feel that they are the subject to slanderous insults that are cast on a group that they are affiliated with.

If Dowe and O'Brien's remarks were directed toward any other minority group on campus, terms like repression and discrimination would have appeared in the Collegian's editorial page. These minority groups might have demanded the termination of the comic strip. I am not asking for the termination of the comic strip. I am, however, asking for discretion to be used in the future when Dowe and O'Brien feel the need to express their prejudices.

No one on this world should feel they are the subject of repression.

Northampton winterfest soothes seasonal blues

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

This week in Northampton, children are encouraged to eat ice cream for breakfast and to chew bubble gum, adults are building snowmen, and the mayors of two local cities are competing in a volleyball game.

The city is not going crazy. The 14th annual Winter Festival has arrived.

The festival, which opened Wednesday, lasts 10 days, ending with the annual French toast and pancake breakfast and bake sale which is put on by a Northampton boy scout troop.

"It is the largest winter festival in the northeast corner," said Paul Walker, executive director of the Northampton Chamber of Commerce.

The festival began with the crowning of two Northampton residents, Bruce Fogel and Nancy Murphy, as King and Queen Winter in a luncheon at the Hotel Northampton.

"The mayor of Northampton has challenged the mayor of Holyoke to a volleyball contest," Walker said. "The mayor (of Northampton) really wants to find out if they can show up Holyoke."

There will also be an overnight sleep for 6 to 12-year-old children at the city's YMCA. The next morning the children will have "a breakfast with all the ice cream they can eat including unlimited chocolate sauce and whipped cream," Walker said.

"The fireworks display (to be held tonight at Smith College athletic field) will attract the most people, but they (the events) are all successful," Walker said.

The Silver Chord Bowl, in which seven college glee clubs compete, is also expected to draw many people. A snow sculpture contest where participants make replicas of ice cream treats will also take place.

"We have only gotten one or two entries," Walker said. "I think people are waiting for the new fresh snow tomorrow night."

The Festival is organized by the Northampton Chamber of Commerce and many of the events and prizes are sponsored by local retailers and businesses.

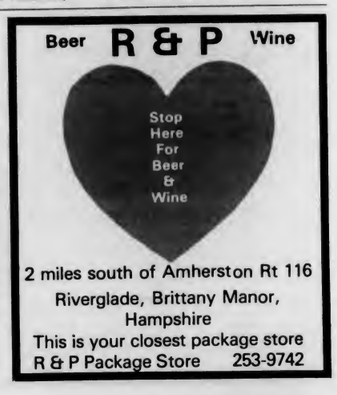
Ristuben said of the Collegian, "I don't put it in a different category from the other papers I was on ... [except] the fact that you're more interested in student activities."

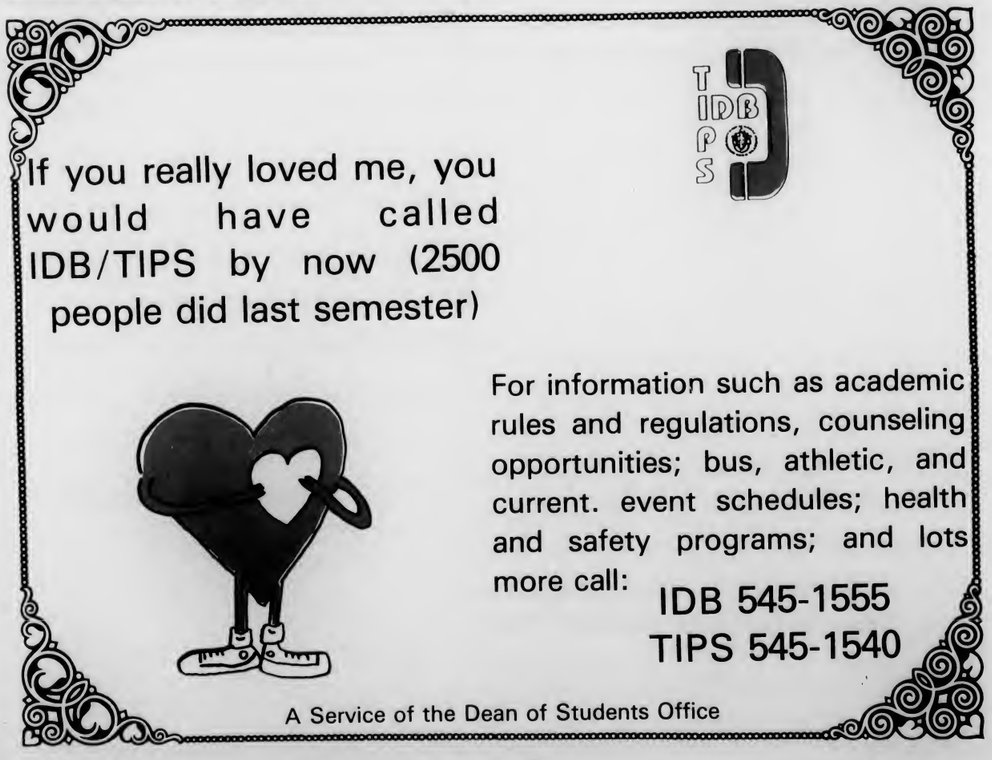
Sherry Sharfman, one of the Collegian's business managers, said Ristuben "gave us a lot of insight into the newspaper business, and brought lots of stories with him. He enhanced everyone's lives in here."

A native of Minneapolis, raised in North Dakota, Ristuben received a bachelor's degree in journalism from the University of North Dakota in 1951. During college he worked in the circulation and advertising offices of the Grand Forks (N.D.) Herald.

He served in the Army during the Korean War, then was employed for two years at the Lowell Sun, 10 years at the Gloucester Times, eight years at the Attleboro Sun-Chronicle and four years as business manager for the Taconic weekly newspaper chain based in Millbrook, N.Y.



During his tenure in Attleboro, he became aware he was suffering from multiple sclerosis, commonly known as MS, an incurable nerve ailment that causes weakness and loss of muscle control. There are about 500,000 MS victims in the United States.



"It was a sort of thing I could live with all through there [Attleboro] and New York. But MS is a continually growing disease. And as it grows it weakens," Ristuben said. Thus he decided this year to apply for a disability pension from the University.

Next week the Collegian will open a collection box for the MS Foundation, which raises money to seek a cure for the disease. Donations from Collegian staff members will be matched by the newspaper at the end of the semester; donations from other students can be brought to the classified advertising counter in the Campus Center weekdays between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Bromery elected to new board

By CHRIS ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Dr. Randolph W. Bromey

Randolph W. Bromery, a geophysics professor at UMass-Amherst who was chancellor of the University for seven years, has been elected to the board of directors of NYNEX Corporation.

NYNEX, a communications company, supplies equipment, advertising and other telephone services to New York Telephone and New England Telephone.

Bromery, a native of Cumberland, Maryland joined the University's geophysics department in 1967 and later served as chairman of the department of geology and geography.

In 1970 he was appointed vice-chancellor for student affairs, after which he was acting chancellor in 1971. He served as chancellor from 1972 until 1978, when he returned to teaching.

A 1956 graduate of Howard University, where he received a bachelor's degree in mathematics and physics, Bromery earned his master's in geology and geophysics from American University, Washington, D.C. in 1962. In 1968, while serving as exploration geophysist with the US Geological Survey, he received a doctorate in geology and oceanography from Johns Hopkins University.

Bromery is the author of more than 150 scientific publications and has lectured extensively on scientific, educational,and social topics for more than two decades. He has traveled in more than a dozen Afrucan nations over the past 14 years as a geophysical consultant for US governmental agencies and private mining and petroleum companies.

Bromery was the founder and first president of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, which has provided finiancial and academic support to blacks, Puerto Rican and other economically disadvantaged students at UMass. He is also a member of Sigma Xi, Phi Kappa Phi, Phi Eta Sigma (honorary) and the Black Scientists Society, of which he was an honorary president.

He received a commendation from the Republic of Liberia for his geophysical work in that country. He was official guest of the presidents of Malawi and the Republic of the Cameroons.

Bromery is the holder of three honorary degrees: a doctorate in education from Western New England College, a doctorate of science from Frostburg State College, and a doctorate of law from the University of Hokkaido, Sapporo, Japan.

A night with an educator , creator of Kwanza

Dr Maulana Karenga, founder of Kwanza, urged an enraptured crowd of over 100 people at Amherst College Wednesday night to respect the demand of history that people advance themselves and others.

Karenga lectured on the issue of "Culture, Struggle, and the Challenge of History: An African World View" in the Converse Red Room as part of local Black History Month activities.

Addressing his audience for just under one hour, an audience that anticipated each word he uttered, Karenga dealt with issues concerning/including pornography, crime, and abortion.

Dressed in what seem to be his favorite, a black dashiki, the California native taught, inspired and, for some, reinforced a sense of confidence.

"What I would like to do is use the time of black history to establish a forum in dialogue about critical issues facing us as a people, African and American, as well as a country," he said, "I believe that black people are key people in a key country and that our liberation would not only require that we free ourselves but that we bring the whole country and indeed contribute to the overall liberation of the whole world."

Karenga is the Executive Director of the Institute of Pan-African Studies in Los Angeles, having taught Black Studies and Social Change courses at the University of California, Riverside, the California State University at Los Angeles, Long Beach, Dominquez Hills, and San Diego and in various colleges and universities across the country.

He has served as Visiting Professor of Black Politics at Stanford University, Visiting Scholar in Black Studies at the University of Washington at Seattle, and is a distinquished visiting scholar of national and international recognition. Karenga has lectured on many large campuses across the country and in Africa, the People's Republic of China, and Trinidad, usually lecturing on his chosen topic of Black life and struggle.

In reference to the movie "The Color Purple" Karenga said that one cannot really say that the movie was racist because it was written by a black woman. "Alice Walker lost control of the play the moment she received the Pulitzer Prize for it and secondly, when Steven Spielberg took it over. It became a public document. It became an instrument to push black pathology."

Perhaps Karenga's most widely recognized contributions are his creations of the Nguzo Sabo (also known as The Seven Principles), a fundamental value system for black community development and his creation of Kwanza, a black holiday celebrated each December by millions throughout the United States and Africa.

Karenga, a contributing advisory editor to The Black Scholar and First World, is a member of the National Conference of Black Political Scientists, the California Black Faculty and Staff Association, and the National Council of Black Studies. Moreover, he is included in Who's Who Among Black Americans, Men of Achievement, Dictionary of Black Culture and Profiles in Black Power.

Karenga demonstrated that he was in no way a fan of President Reagan as he criticized the President, for both his personal and professional traits. But there is one question that has been plaguing him for some time.

Ironically (but seriously) he asked, "How is it that they can elect a president who has tob e awakened in an audience with the pope.?"

The event was sponsored by the Amherst College Lecture Fund, Five College Lecture Committee, the UMass Dean of Students Office, the Deme Council, the Black Studies Department at Amherst College, the Assocation of Pan African Unity at Mount Holyoke College, the Afro American Students Assocation of Smith College, and the Black Mass Communication Project of UMass.

In closing, Karenga said, "It is important for students to not simply study realtiy but to also have the desire to change it, because that is the demand of history.

"How is that the demand of history?" he continued, "Any generation that does not advance its society and its people (behind a position) and boundaries — that is a generation that has no rational for life."

A reception was held following the lecture in the Charles Drew House.

What do you think of Valentine's Day?

Collegian photos by Michelle Segall, Paul Desmarais and Rob Skelton

Lester High
88 Environmental Design maj.
Valentine's Day should be a day of rest and relaxation with the one you love. Although people emphasize that particular day with love and giving, I like to give love, flowers and candy every time I possibly can. Love is always.

Amy Schenin
86 Human Services maj.
It is a very romantic holiday. It is fun if you have a valentine but if you don't have one it can be very depressing. Its just one of those things our culture has developed to celebrate.

Carlton Spence
89 Marketing Management maj.
Valentines Day is a special day in which we express our feelings toward a loved one although love should not only be expressed on one day of the year but continuously.

Yvette Russell
89 Journalism maj.
To me Valentines Day is understood to be a time of special relationship, a time of showing your love for someone. It's one day out of the year for love.

Hope Jones
89 Legal Studies maj.
Valentines Day is a special day shared by loved ones. It is a day when two people who are special to each other celebrate the meaning of love in their own way

Newman Club 'Say It With A Flower'

1.) If your name is listed, please come to the Campus Center Concourse to claim your flower. 2.) Red means "I love you" Pink means "I like you" White means "I want to get to know you" 3.) You have two guesses as to who sent you the flower. If you do not guess properly, you must pay $.50 to receive the card.

Ben Holt, distinguished baritone vocalist.

Ben Holt — perfection

By MIKE GERVASI
Collegian Correspondent

Ben Holt came to the Bowker Auditorium last Wednesday night where he performed a show bordering on technical perfection.

Holt, singing what would be considered lyric baritone, has attended the Oberlin Conservatory of Music as well as the Juilliard School. He has also performed with such masters as Tito Gobbi and Luciano Pavarotti. He has won awards such as Winner of the Young Concert Artists International Auditions and has sung with the Metropolitan Opera.

His performance Wednesday night clearly indicated the reasons for these honors. He started with some American songs and immediately exhibited a seemingly unlimited range in pitch, displaying the high and low ends with no apparent effort.

His next set was a group of Lieder by Brahms. His selections demanded a powerful voice and a slightly brassy edge. The singer achieved this easily and filled the audience with energy. Technically, he did everything almost perfectly – from a heavy powerful sound to a sweet tender lilt of the voice.

The rest of the show consisted of songs by Poulenc, Ravel, Barbera and Ginastera. Throughout, He explored the whole emotional range and conveyed the wealth of diverse feelings encompassed by all these pieces. From humorous to serious and back, he said "I program for myself and the audience . . . It's good to mix it up a little bit." The highlight of the evening was a song called "Triste" by Alberto Ginestera, a stark, powerful piece about a broken relationship. A gasp spread through the audience as the closing chord floated away.

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Before I get to the big movie story this week, I'd like to mention a very thought provoking documentary now playing at the Pleasant St. Theatre. 28 UP takes a look at the lives of 14 British children with interviews conducted at the ages of 7, 14, 21, and 28. See it before it leaves on Tuesday.

The big movie story in the valley this week is, of course, the 24 hour science fiction movie marathon at The Amherst Cinema. In case you haven't heard, the marathon starts at midnight on this Saturday (the 15th) and goes through past midnight on Sunday. If you are unfamiliar with the movies mentioned in the advertisment, here's some stuff on each movie.

The Fly: This 1958 classic directed by Kurt Neumann is the story of a scientist who works on a teleportation device until... a freak accident occurs! (Dun! Dun! and other bits of shocking horror music). Through a strange set of circumstances the scientist gets his molecules mixed up with those of a fly (surprise!). The half-man/half-fly wreaks havoc, runs amok, enjoys watching Gilligan's Island and other horrible things. Vincent Price stars.

Eraserhead: This 1978 experimental film has become a cult classic. WARNING: THIS FILM WILL NOT BE UNDERSTOOD IF YOU ARE IN A CHEMICALLY ALTERED STATE. You won't understand it if you are completely straight either. The story has to do with this kid who is zombie, his mate and their strange offspring.

DarkStar: This 1978 film directed by John Carpenter (Halloween) has become an underground classic (I sure do use that word a lot, huh?). This is a pretty funny satire of many of the old B-level science fiction movies of the 60's. There are strange characters and strange creatures and a lot of science fiction in-jokes that only science fiction club members are permitted to laugh at due to secret Amherst laws.

Videodrome: This 1983 movie directed by David Cronenburg stars Deborah Harry (of Blondie fame) and James Woods. The leaflet from the cinema says it is "an intriguing story about a pirate Cable-TV programmer and some mesmerizing TV transmissions". I heard this one wasn't so good, so it might be a good time to catch a few z's while it's on.

Kevin Bacon, Jamie Gertz and Paul Rodriguez star in Quicksilver.

When Worlds Collide: This 1951 film directed by Rudolph Mate is one of my all time sf favorites. This is the one we've all seen some Saturday morning in our childhood. Just to refresh your memory, the movie is about a sun and its obiting planet that is rushing on a collision course towards Earth. Wake up for this golden oldie.

Star Trek II: The Wrath of Kahn: This 1982 sequel outclassed the first movie so much that the first one is now best forgotten. Directed by Nicholas Meyer (Time After Time, The Day After, etc.), this tight action packed movie celebrates the Star Trek icons while at the same time giving the uninitiated an involving story to watch.

Star Trek III: The Search For Spock: This 1984 movie was directed by Spock himself (Leonard Nimoy in his directoral debut) and answers the ultimate question at the end of the last movie: What really happened to Spock? The film lacks the punch of the last movie but is still enjoyable to watch.

Escape From New York: This 1981 film marks director John Carpenter's second movie in the sf marathon. It stars Kurt Russell as rough and tough character who must rescue the President from New York which has become a maximum security prison in the year 1997.

Batman: TV's campy dynamic duo in their own movie, fighting a host of weird villians who threaten world peace. Heavy-duty realism.

Scanners: This 1981 film directed by David Cronenburg tells the story of telepathic humans who can make people's heads explode. If you're tired, you can sleep though this Cronenburg film too.

2010: This 1984 film directed by Peter Hyams is the sequel to the landmark sf film 2001. It stars Roy Scheider and John Lithgow as astronauts who hitch a ride to Jupiter to unravel the mysteries of the first film. Not as breathtaking as the first, but this sequel also does a pretty good job and has a message pleading for cooperation between the superpowers.

Hardware Wars: A low budget spoof on Star Wars.

The Thing: This 1982 movie marks director John Carpenter's third and final appearance in the marathon.

Arts Calendar

Loads of things to do this weekend and next week. Go out. Have fun, and don't be a blob in front of the tube watching Gomer Pyle re-runs.

THEATRE:

The UMass Hampden Program will present Crackwalker at Hampden Theatre (Southwest area), on Feb. 13-15 at 8 p.m.

Smith College Theatre department will present Surprise, Surprise, and Berthe, two one-act plays at 8 p.m. in Hallie Flanagan Theatre on Feb. 13, 14, and 15. admission is $1.

A Day in Hollywood/A Night in the Ukraine (A Musical Double Feature) will be presented by the Smith College Theatre department on Feb. 20-28 and Mar. 1 in Theatre 14, admission is $1, $2, and $4.

Mount Holyoke College will house a one-woman show by Linda Humes on Saturday, Feb. 15 at 7:30 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium.

Also at Mount Holyoke, the "Princess of Black Poetry", Nikki Giovanni will speak in Gamble Auditorium on Wednesday, Feb. 19 at 7:30 p.m.

The Jones Library is featuring local performer Brian Smith as a storyteller on Wednesday, Feb. 19 at 2:30 p.m. in the Burnett Gallery. Smith will present Johnny Appleseed–Frontier Hero.

DANCE:

The UMass Fine Arts Center present the world-famous Nikolais Dance Theatre on Wednesday, Feb. 19 at 8 p.m. The New York Times has said, "It goes without saying that Mr. Nikolais is a very special choreographer. The proof is that no one has succeeded in doing what he does." Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (545-2511), and at local DATATIX outlets (1-800-243-4842).

MUSIC:

The University All Senior Honor Band performs Saturday, Feb. 15, 7 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

The UMass Department of Music and Dance is presenting a faculty recital: Jon Humphrey, tenor, and Nadine Shank, piano, at Bezanson Recital Hall, Monday, Feb. 17, 8 p.m.

The Hampden Program will present a Dance Department Concert at the Hampden Theatre (Southwest area), on Feb. 20-22.

Iron Eagle: a Jr. Rambo

Iron Eagle Starring Jason Gedrick and Lou Gossett, Jr. Directed by Sidney J. Furie

By CHRIS ARROLL
Collegian Correspondent

Iron Eagle is an anti-terrorist film that will amuse many campus republicans. It stars Jason Gedrick as a crusading kid on a mission to rescue his father.

Doug is eighteen. On the day of his prom his father is shot down over disputed territory in Northern Africa, 6000 miles from home. Doug is determined to rescue his father. Colonel "Chappy" Sinclair, played by Lou Gossett, Jr., helps Doug on a vigilante mission to bomb the country and rescue his father.

Doug's experience with F-16 trainers and his freedom and control of the air base where he lives are acute adolescent fantasies that are hardly believable. His plane easily dodges the heat seeking missles from the soviet Migs that seem to fall as unchallenging targets. Blacks are treated as expendable token actors, as we see with the convenient fate of Colonel Sinclair. Arabs are all evil, mean, and enept. Typical of the good guy / bad guy framework of these kind of movies.

The movie is aimed at the hearts and minds of junior high school preadolescents and below. The mixture of romantic naivete, adventurism is a great combo for those who are not troubled yet with the responsibility of thinking.

All in all this movie is like a combination between a jr. wimpy Rambo and Red Dawn. If you want to see this film leave your brain at home and get ready to have your emotions manipulated. If you intend to watch this for action you will be disappointed unless you like silent fireballs and T.V. action shows.

Theater group to focus on Jewish issues

By KELLY SIEGER
Collegian Staff

A new theatric troupe is now in development, whose performances will focus on Jewish issues and Jewish awareness.

The group was begun by Marcia Black, who is in her third year as Jewish Awareness Educator for SCERA. In the past, she has carried out her job through workshops, concentrating on Jewish issues and anti-Semitism. Black feels that theater will be a more effective device for examining Jewish issues.

"You can only talk to people so much," said Black. "Theater gets people to feel, with the characters."

Black was the director of last semester's successful run of The Survivor, which was about young Jewish adults rebelling against the Nazis. "People told me how much it had affected them," Black said, "It's very effective."

The new troupe, which will hold its performances in residence hall lounges, will not focus on an existing piece. The performers of the group will be writing and producing their own script. "The students will be creating their own piece," explains Black. "They will explore and develop characters, both fictional and historical figures. The piece itself will weave historical and contemporary Jewish issues."

The show will be what Black refers to as a collage piece, meaning that several different mediums are used. Music, lighting and slides will add to the show. Black has considerable experience in this form of production, which was made popular in the 70s. She majored in religion as an undergraduate and studied playwriting in graduate school. She has worked with theaters in New York, and has concentrated on a technique using native American storytelling.

Auditions will begin next week. Black is looking for people able to act and write. She also needs those interested in helping with lighting, props, and costumes. She herself will be "guiding, directing and writing." Auditions will be at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, in room 174 Campus Center, UMass. Anyone interested and in need more information should contact Marcia Black at 545-0341.

Men's volleyball starts fast

By ROB SKELTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's volleyball team took a large step forward as it tore apart a nine-team field in winning the United States Volleyball Association (USVBA) Holyoke Invitational, last Sunday in Holyoke.

The Minutemen, who prepared all week for their New England Collegiate Volleyball League (NECVL) opener scheduled for tonight at Springfield College, blasted six straight opponents including Springfield College enroute to the championship trophy.

That trophy is to be sent to the Volleyball Hall of Fame in Holyoke.

UMass, 6-0 overall, defeated a Springfield team, 15-10, 15-5, a team representing Holyoke, 15-8, 15-10 and Westfield State College, 16-14, 15-5.

The Minutemen also defeated a second team representing Holyoke, 15-8, 15-13 and 15-7, 15-9 in the finals.

The Minutemen, led by co-tournament most valuable players John Chin and Roger Chapman, got a preview of what to expect for the upcoming season opener when they met Springfield College in the semi-finals.

Considered the Minutemen's arch-rival, Springfield won all four of its matches on the day and faced a do-or-die match against the Minutemen.

But the Minutemen were not to be denied, as they passed crisply and dominated the net.

Sparked by the powerful hitting of Minuteman inside hitter Javier Lugo, UMass crushed a shellshocked Springfield team, 15-2, 15-2 to advance to the finals.

The Minutemen then scrimmaged Amherst College on Monday.

Just coming off their big win in Holyoke, the Minutemen started slowly, but still came away with a win over their local rivals.

Chapman suffered an ankle injury in that match, but he is expected to play in this weekend's action.

UMass will be in the NECVL Open Meet on Sunday at Springfield College.

"We're playing pretty well right now," said Chapman. "I feel pretty confident that we'll do well in the tourney."

Nolan, a junior that excells on the defensive end, was also pleased with the team's early efforts.

"It's taken us a while to get the team off the ground," he said. "But we're playing some solid volleyball now."

"I think as the season progresses, we'll get much better. We're looking pretty decent."

Minuteman gymnasts at home vs. MIT; women on the road

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's gymnastics teams will both be facing New England competition this Saturday with the men hosting the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the women traveling down to Springfield, to face the Chiefs.

The Minutemen (3-4) will be going against an MIT team that UMass head coach Roy Johnson called, "one of the stronger teams in New England this year."

But after Johnson reviewed the Engineer scoresheets for the past few meets, he changed his tune.

"Actually they have only been scoring around 200 points over the past few meets," Johnson said, "If we score anywhere near what we have been doing this season we will take the meet hands down."

The Minutemen have been averaging around 240 for the season. Also their consistency in the all-around with Roberto Weil and Jay Ronayne, gives the Minutemen and advantage.

This meet will feature freshmen John Eggers in his first all-around effort of his collegiate career.

"I'm definitely excited about it," Eggers said, "Hopefully I could score around a 48 or so. If I do that it will be a real good meet."

The action will start at 1 p.m. at the Boyden Gymnastics Center.

The women will take their 2-4 record down to Springfield to hopefully have an easy meet for a change. The Minutewomen haven't lost to Springfield in over five years.

Head coach Chuck Scheibler is optimistic.

"They have some pretty good recruits," Scheibler said, "But we have been averaging more points all season than they have."

After reminded of his teams three loses by less than a point this season he replied, "We need a meet like this."

The main reason for Scheibler's confidence is due to his teams remarkably good injury record. Although tri-captain Tricia Harrity is out with a sprained right ankle, she will be replaced by either Lou Kaufman or Sue Carney as the teams third all-arounder.

Barbara Hebel and senior guard Juanita Matthews, along with freshman forward Beth Wilbor are the three prime sharpshooters for UMass. When they are off, it usually turns out to be a long night for the Minutewomen. UMass changed the rims for 35 percent from the floor against GW.

"The lack of ball movement really hurt us (against GW)," Stevens said. "The inside was shut down and we couldn't rely on our outside shooting. Things just weren't falling for us."

Another thorn in the side for the Minutewomen has been recent foul trouble for key players. Both Bernier and Matthews fouled out against GW. When that happens, especially to the comparitively small UMass frontline, teams take advantage of the lack of height and stick the ball inside. Against the Colonials, UMass went to the foul line a total of seven times while GW produced 27 attempts for the game.

The Minutewomen were 78-56 victims when the two teams last met in Philadelphia. Wilbor led UMass in scoring with 12 points while Temple was led by Addie Jackson's 18 points.

Minutewoman Mutterings: Both Wilbor (groin pull) and junior guard Mary Marquedant (charley horse) are expected to dress for tonight's game. . .Freshman point guard Christel Zullo failed to register any assists against GW, still leaving her two assists shy of the 100 assist mark. She can become only the fifth UMass player to reach that mark and the first freshman. . .Senior forward Karen Damminger needs only five rebounds to move to fifth on the all-time UMass rebounding list. She has 463 career rebounds.

Minutemen rout Rutgers, 60-50

Mundy leads UM to 3rd straight

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It was your typical Curry Hicks Cage blowout, the kind University of Massachusetts basketball fans have become all too accustomed to in recent years.

With one major difference this time, the good guys won.

The Minutemen rolled to their third straight victory before 3,222 at The Cage last night, downing an outclassed Rutgers team, 60-50.

UMass climbed to 9-14 overall and 6-8 in the Atlantic 10, a game out out fifth place as Duquesne fell to 7-7 with a 79-62 loss at Temple.

The Minutemen now face St. Joseph's at the Cage on Saturday night and Temple on Monday night, also at home. But for now, they will savor last night's victory.

It was freshman Mike Mundy that sparked UMass again last night. The entertaining 5-10 freshmen scored a career-high 15 points while helping UMass out of its first half doldrums.

"What can I say about Mike? He's doing his thing, but staying under control," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "I'm confident having him in there now, he's really come around from earlier in the season when he was more prone to making mistakes."

Sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton added 13 for UMass with freshman forward David Brown chipping in 10. Senior center Tom Emerson contributed a career-high eight along with four rebounds and continued consistent defensive play.

Rutgers (7-17 and 2-13 in the A-10) lost their eighth straight and looked bad doing it. Committing an unheard-of 28 turnovers, the Scarlet Knights failed to place a player in double figures with 44 percent shooting from the floor and a rim-bending 43 percent (10-of-23) from the line.

"We played solid perimeter defense and in the second half we showed the killer instinct," said Gerlufsen. "This was a nice win."

The first half was just plain awful. Both teams did their best to imitate a Harlem Globetrotter opponent - throwing away the ball, missing layups and generally playing like they were mentally elsewhere.

But Mundy, to the cheers of the crowd, came off the pines with 12:08 left in the period (with UM trailing, 11-6) and did his thing.

Stealing a pass under the hoop from Ed Zucker, the lightning-quick Mundy hit a layup while being fouled and converted the free throw for a three-point play and a 17-15 UMass lead, one they would never lose.

The half ended with UMass up, 26-20 as Mundy scored seven and Brown eight. The Knights committed 16 turnovers in the period and were 4-of-12 at the line.

Minuteman freshman Duane Chase set the tone for the second half quickly. Hitting two straight one-handed turnarounds, Chase paced UMass to a 30-20 lead and the rout was on.

Emerson then connected on two baseline jumpers and it was 36-24 and the crowd was going crazy. The UMass lead hovered between 10 and 12 until Carl Smith made a steal, fed Mundy and his 15-footer made it 50-35 with 5:46. Rutgers coach Craig Littlepage went for the time out, but it was a never a game again.

The lead got as high as 17, 56-39 on a Sutton jumper with 2:17 to go. Gerlufsen then cleared his bench and the pine crew of Jackie Sheehan, Billy Hampton, Fitzhugh Tarry and Wilbert Hicks mopped up. Sheehan scored his first points of the year, walking away from the free throw line with a wide smile and two points with 1:18 to go. Hampton, still looking for his first collegiate points since walking onto the team two years ago, was hammered several times in missing two layups, but couldn't get to the line.

"We're on a roll now," said Emerson. "We're playing like we're capable of. This team's going to cause some trouble the rest of the way."

Minuteman Mutterings: Smith, with 10 assists, now needs 14 to tie the UM career record of 518. . .Mundy has scored double-figures two games in a row. . .More Signs in the Crowd: Mundy Magic, Give M a T (waved frequently at Rutgers), Mundy Madness,
Dunking Duane (for Chase), scores for Chase's dunks (including a 5.7 from the Russian judge) and a RON (on separate cards) for Gerlufsen. The best sign seen at the next two home games gets its picture in the Collegian.

Sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton goes high for a shot last night at the Cage against Rutgers. UMass won, 60-50.

Chase had one dunk, a monster two-hander from the baseline from Smith in the first half. . .the winning locker room was madness with UVC sportscaster Russ Whinnem interviewing the players and a horde of reporters clustered around the stars.

The Dorm Fridge: Rutgers center Lloyd Moore, all 6-9, 265 pounds of him, was heckled unmericifully by the crowd, especially when Mundy, all 5-10, 155 pounds of him, tried to draw a charge.

UMass (60) Mike Mundy 5-9 5-5 15, Lorenzo Sutton 5-13 2-4 12, David Brown 5-9 0-0 10, Tom Emerson 3-5 2-2 8, Duane Chase 3-5 1-2 7, Sean Mosby 1-4 2-2 4, Carl Smith 1-6 0-0 2, Jack Sheehan 0-0 2-2 2, John Milum 0-1 0-0 0, Wilbert Hicks 0-0 0-0 0, Fitzhugh Tarry 0-1 0-0 0, Bill Hampton 0-2 0-0 0. Totals: 23-55 14-17 60.

St. Joseph Temple invade Cage

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

If you're a basketball fan, this is a good weekend not to go home.

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, in the midst of a four-game homestand, will host two of the better teams in the Atlantic 10 Conference, St. Joseph's University and Temple University.

St. Joe's comes into the Curry Hicks Cage on Saturday afternoon at 7:30 p.m. while the Owls of TU will be here at the age on Monday, also at 7:30 p.m.

Both games, as usual, are free to all UMass students with a alid student ID card.

Prior to Thursday night's games, the Hawks were 12-2 in the eague and 18-4 overall with the Owls 10-3 in the A-10 and also 8-4 overall.

Both teams defeated UMass at home earlier this season. St. Joe's was n 88-74 winner as All-American candidate Maurice Martin scored 27 points and killed the Minutemen. At Temple, UMass was hurt by terrible shooting and lost, 69-38 as Ed Coe led the Owls with 16 points. The Owls also boast A-10 leading shot blocket Tim Perry.

"These will be rough games for us, but I'm confident we'll do well at home," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "A win over either team would be a big one for us."

In the last game between St. Joe's and UMass, Lorenzo Sutton had 19 points for UMass. Against Temple, Sutton was high man with 13. Freshman center John Milum and St. Joe's center Rodney Blake also came close to an altercation in the game, setting up their second meeting on Saturday night.

UM women host Owls tonight

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team takes the floor against the Owls of Temple University tonight at the Cage (7:30 p.m. start), they will be looking to accomplish two things.

First and foremost is to come out on top over the Owls and snap a three-game overall losing streak and an eight game Atlantic 10 losing streak. But to do this, the Minutewomen must also meet the second challenge; establish consistency in their game.

"Intensity and consistency seem to be our two biggest problems," UMass head coach Barbara Stevens said. "We've put together some good halves and good spurts, but we just haven't had a complete 40 minute effort in a while."

It's common knowledge by now that the Minutewomen are a battered bunch. There is no doubt that injuries have cost UMass several games this season. The loss of sophomore center Sue Burtoft and sophomore forward Tara Lewis has placed an overwhelming burden on senior captain Jerrie Bernier and senior forward Karen Damminger to produce inside and has all but nullified the UMass attack under the glass.

Because of that, the Minutewomen have been relying heavily on perimeter shooting, something that has been a strong suit for previous UMass teams. The only downfall here is when you live by the jumper, you die by the jumper as was proved in Monday's 61-46 loss to George Washington University. Senior forward

Officials say spraying safe despite violation

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Correspondent

Officials overseeing the pesticide spraying of University of Massachusetts-owned residences say they are confident the system is safe despite Thursday's violation of regulations.

"I'm satisfied with the regulations issued by my office. To the best of my knowledge they are being carried out," said UMass Environmental Health and Safety officer Al Sorenson.

The violation Thursday involved signs not being posted in public places at the University Apartments, a family housing complex for UMass students located on North Pleasant Street.

Sorenson said Thursday he would contact physical plant officials to make sure they they post signs prior to future sprayings.

"There is no need for concern. It (spray) doesn't drift out into public areas."
— apartment housing officer

Other regulations requiring that residents be individually warned of spraying and the type of chemicals used were followed, according to a residents.

The notification sheets posted on residents' doors identified the chemicals used. They were: Pyrethin, Drione, and Diozinon. A spokeswoman at the Massachusetts Poison Information Center in Boston said Pyrethin was "of not a very high toxicity," but that Drione and Diozinon were both respiratory irritants.

"They could cause pneumonia-like symptoms if the exposure was high enough," said the spokeswoman, including coughing, wheezing, nausea and vomiting.

But, she said, "you'd have to be in there a while before (the effects) got really serious," noting that none of the three chemicals is fatal except in extreme cases.

"The pesticides are approved by the Environmental Protection Agency and the people who apply them are licensed by the state," Sorenson said, adding that he has never gotten any complaints about the program.

"There's no need for concern. It (the spray) doesn't drift out into public areas," said Gary Cichaski, housing officer for University and Lincoln Apartments.

Stanley Karcz, a Pest Control worker at the physical plant department, said, "I've been on this job 23 years. It's hard to make people realize what a big job it is and we do a good job."

3500 march against racism in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA

About 85 Amherst area residents and college students journeyed to this Pennsylvania city Saturday to join 3,500 demonstrators for a rally and march against racism.

"It was peaceful and nonviolent and at the same time the statement was a very assertive one," said Tom Neilson, a graduate student in international education.

The march, which drew people from many different political groups and the entire northeast, was organized to combat a perceived rise of racism nationwide and racial violence in Philadelphia in particular.

University of Massachusetts political science major Karen Motely, 20, said she thought "the march was very effective because there were so many people there and the people who were watching were very supportive."

About 15 speakers from labor unions, gay and lesbian groups, student organizations and many other associations addressed the rallies before and after the two-mile march through downtown Philadelphia.

Of the Amherst contingent, two individuals played a special role. Gerry Scoppettuolo, coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, helped coordinate a fundraising campaign during the march to help defray the costs of the demonstration.

Chong Ami Yu, the Third World Women's Program coordinator at the Everywoman's Center, spoke at the rally as a representative of Young Koreans United.

She urged Asian-Americans to unite with their "black brothers against white supremacy."

"We must overcome prejudice among ourselves," she

Jailed South African Nelson Mandela, Joel Carlson, addresses listeners' questions Friday night at Smith College.

Lawyer blasts apartheid

Compares to Nazism

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The government in South Africa compares to that of Nazi Germany and could be changed in a year if the United States would adopt a clear position concerning the apartheid system there, the former lawyer for Nelson Mandela said Friday night.

Mandela, the former leader of the banned African National Congress, has been imprisoned since 1964 by the South African Government for his anti-apartheid stance.

Joel Carlson, a South African exile since 1971, told about 50 people in the Neilson Browsing Room at Smith College, "The whites in South Africa have a superiority complex, which is nothing new for the world. After all, what was Hitler?

"As soon as slavery was abolished in 1834, the pass laws were used to regiment blacks to serve white society," Carlson said.

Carlson cited South Africa's pass laws, which require every black person over age 16 to carry documents similar to a passport at all times.

"Every cop on the street has the God-given ability to know when someone is 16. And if you are 12 or 14 and can't produce a pass when asked, you go to jail," he said.

Carlson served as a lawyer in South Africa from 1951 until he left the country in 1971. During the 1960s, he represented Mandela and other members of the African National Congress. Carlson said he escaped from South Africa after his possessions were seized and his passport confiscated.

He said he decided to leave the country after asking himself, "Have I the right as a father to put the lives of my children in danger?"

"My office was shot up, I received a bomb in the mail, and my car was fire-bombed," he said.

Carlson criticized American corporations that invest in South Africa.

"No American corporation has ever changed any South African law to benefit blacks," he said.

The United States could end apartheid within a year by restricting the flow of oil to South Africa, he said.

Apartheid is the system whereby the country's white population, a minority, control the country's blacks, who make up the majority.

Reagan envoy meets with Marcos, Aquino

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Reagan's special envoy, Philip Habib, met separately yesterday with President Ferdinand E. Marcos and with Corazon Aquino, both unyielding in their claims to the Philippine presidency.

When Reagan sent Habib here, he said the veteran troubleshooter was on a fact-finding mission and would report back to him on the aftermath of the Feb. 7 presidential election.

Mrs. Aquino was still ahead in an independent vote count although the National Assembly officially proclaimed Marcos the victor Saturday.

Mrs. Aquino's spokesman, Rene Saguisag, said the opposition candidate gave Habib "an earful" about perceived U.S. support for Marcos.

In a printed statement yesterday, Mrs. Aquino said, "What is at stake here is more than the removal of an imposter president. It is the future of democracy itself."

Some U.S. officials hinted Habib might try to act as a negotiator, but neither Habib nor the people he met gave any sign that was so.

Despite world criticism of Marcos' victory claim, growing economic pressures and a unified and emboldened opposition, the president seemed confident he can rule for another six years.

His only public comment after meeting two hours with Habib was that Habib guaranteed he was "not interested in any way in telling us how to run our affairs." Marcos, who has been running the Philippines for 20 years with a mixture of authoritarian rule and democracy, said he gave Habib documents proving his opponents cheated and used violence in the election.

Roman Catholic bishops, independent pollwatchers, international observers, and Reagan himself have cited fraud and terrorism by the government side.

Signs emerged that Mrs. Aquino's call for restrained civil disobedience at a giant rally Sunday was having an effect.

The price of stock in the huge San Miguel Corp. dropped about 20 percent from last week. Mrs. Aquino asked Filipinos to boycott the company, whose chairman, Eduardo Cojuangco, she called a Marcos "crony."

Several banks she listed for boycott reported heavy withdrawals.

Mrs. Aquino has asked for strikes, school walkouts, boycotts and noise barrages the day after Marcos' inauguration, expected next week.

Capsule sales halted

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — The maker of Tylenol announced yesterday it will no longer produce over-the-counter medication in capsules, nine days after cyanide-contaminated capsules killed a woman and more than three years after they killed seven people in Illinois.

"We feel the company can no longer guarantee the safety of these capsules," said James E. Burke, chairman of Johnson & Johnson.

The announcement came as a team of investigators went to Pennsylvania to trace the path of the Tylenol capsules taken by a woman who died in suburban New York City on Feb. 8.

The 1982 cyanide-poisoning deaths of seven people in Illinois also were blamed on tainted Tylenol capsules.

Burke urged people to switch to coated oval-shaped tablets known as caplets, and said Johnson & Johnson would replace free any capsules consumers or stores now have.

The decision was made to "protect the public," he said. The replacement program will cost the company an estimated $150 million, he said, adding that does not compare with the suffering of the family of 23-year-old Diane Elsroth, who had taken cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules.

IN FLIGHT — Senior mechanical engineering major Kevin Vicha takes to the air outside the Fine Arts Center Sunday.

Retired UMass professor dead at 78

Funeral services are scheduled for 11 a.m. today at the Douglass Funeral Home, Amherst, for George Ivask, 78, of Summit St., a former University of Massachusetts professor who died Thursday after suffering a heart attack on campus.

Mr. Ivask collapsed near the Campus Pond and Tower Library Thursday night. He was found by a woman who administered cardio-pulmonary resuscitation. He was then taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where he was pronounced dead at 9:45 p.m.

Mr. Ivask taught Russian literature at the University until he retired in 1976. He was a well-known Russian poet and author.

Born in Moscow, Ivask studied in Estonia and received a law degree from the University of Tartu. He emigrated to the US in 1949 and received a doctorate in Russian literature from Harvard University in 1954. He taught at Harvard and Vanderbilt University before coming to UMass in 1969.

Mr. Iwask was the author of many essays on Russian literary figures, including Dostoevsky, Vozrozhdeni and Mandelshtam. He also wrote several collections of poetry, including an edition published by the Soviet Union's underground press.

He was a member of the Russian Emigrant Writers in Paris and of the St. Peter and St. Paul Russian Orthodox Church in Springfield.

His wife, the former Tamara Mezak, died in 1982. He is survived by one cousin in Estonia.

"He liked Amherst a great deal. He was happy to live in a place which was associated with great writers and poets. He especially liked Emily Dickinson," said a Slavic languages professor, who asked not to be identified.

Russell Buck, in his fourth year at UMass, is coordinating the upcoming Railroad Society hobby show this Sunday.

Society steamed up over model railroads

By PEDRO M. PEREIRA
Collegian Correspondent

Harold Smith, a professor in the University of Massachusetts French department, says railroads are not just a hobby, but rather a "passion."

Because of this fondness, Smith said, he has been a loyal member of the Amherst Railway Society, a non-profit educational organization formed in 1965. The club has about 170 members who meet monthly in the Marcus Auditorium in the Joseph Marcus Building, formerly Engineering East.

The meetings, Smith said, feature speakers from around the country, including museum operators and railroad officials. "It's a great club," he said. "You make friends there."

Bill Venman, an education professor and another railroad enthusiast, is the society's treasurer.

"My main experience I get out of it is being with a group of people who like the same kinds of things I do," Venman said. "Railroads are the height of mechanical perfection."

Venman said models are his main interest. "I'm on my sixth layout [model setup] now. It's taken me four years to get this far."

Russell Buck, a UMass senior, said he has attended all of the society's annual model railroad shows. In addition to building and operating some of the shows' models, Buck said he enjoys to "take pictures and chase trains."

Buck said he and his fellow railroad enthusiasts occasionally drive alongside railways and photograph them to get ideas for layouts.

"I like to take a picture and model it exactly as it is," Buck said.

The society will hold this year's annual show 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday at West Springfield's Better Living Center. The event will feature railroad layouts from around the country; a display of railroad collectibles, such as old lanterns and timetables; an auction and videos.

Buck said he will operate one of the highlighted layouts that allows the operator to control the trains.

Gramm-Rudman may cut aid . . .

By BOB KIEVRA
Collegian Staff

Unless Congress or the judiciary alters the present version of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction legislation, financial aid for thousands of University of Massachusetts students could be in jeopardy, according to lawmakers and college representatives.

"If Gramm-Rudman goes into effect in its present form, the federal government will be earmarked for a 25 percent across-the-board cut for fiscal year 1987," said Arthur Jackson, University of Massachusetts director of financial aid. "This could translate into reductions in financial aid for more than 4,000 students."

Enacted last December, the bill, co-sponsored by Senate Republicans Phil Gramm of Texas and Warren Rudman of New Hampshire, forces Congress to trim the federal deficit by $36 billion a year for the next six years.

If Congress and the President fail to enact a plan that would achieve these reductions in a given year, across-the-board spending cuts would automatically take effect.

Along with education, other areas open for cuts include transportation, health, agriculture, science, and certain defense department programs.

U.S. Representative Silvio Conte, R-Mass., is one of 12 Congressmen challenging the constitutionality of Gramm-Rudman.

Speaking to members of the House of Representatives last month, Conte charged that Congress was neglecting its constitutional duties.

"The people of this country have elected us to make the hard decisions on federal policy and spending," Conte said. "I am not prepared to surrender my vote, and my representation of the people of western Massachusetts, to some bureaucrat's red pen."

The Committee on Education Funding, a lobbying group, estimated that if Gramm-Rudman takes effect, the Supplemental Education Opportunity Grant and College Work-Study program could both be cut by 60 percent in Fiscal 1986.

Those reductions would knock 900,000 students out of the programs, according to the committee. The committee, which represents more than 90 education organizations, said the Pell Grant program could be shrunk by 15 per cent, denying aid to 428,000 students.

Jackson said that he believes no one in Congress really gave much thought to the Gramm-Rudman amendment.

"No one looked at the long-range implications involved," Jackson said. "Gramm-Rudman will not leave any program untouched. It's a deficit eating machine that can't be stopped."

. . . but SAFA to fight law

Getting answers to why both Bay State Senators supported the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget amendment will be a high priority of a group of University of Massachusetts students preparing for a lobbying trip to the nation's capital.

From March 1 to March 5, Students Advocating Financial Aid, a registered student organization, will send more than 40 of its members to Washington to lobby legislators on matters concerning financial aid.

"We are particularly interested in finding out from both Senators Kennedy and Kerry why they each supported the Gramm-Rudman legislation," said Steven Sullivan, vice-president of SAFA.

"They were the only ones from the Massachusetts congressional delegation to vote for it," Sullivan said. "I think students across the Commonwealth deserve an answer."

In addition to Kerry and Kennedy, SAFA also scheduled meetings with other influential members of Congress, said Chris Liberatore, trip coordinator.

"Right now we plan on meeting with Representative Jim Wright, Senator Gary Hart, and lobbyist Anne Wexler," she said.

"Wright will be particularly useful being that he will probably become the next Speaker of the House," Liberatore said. "Gary Hart has influence in the Senate, and Anne Wexler's name is well known around Washington," Liberatore said.

Sullivan said that while many student groups travel to Washington to plead their case, SAFA is different.

"We don't stand outside the White House fence and protest. Instead, we go directly to senators and congressmen and ask the tough questions and argue our case."

Those students who make the trip are well-organized before they leave Amherst, Sullivan said.

"We conduct workshops and simulation meetings to help students understand how Congress works," Sullivan said. "We've had students tell us they've learned more in those three days in Washington than they have during their time at UMass."

SAFA will work hard to urge the repeal of the Gramm-Rudman legislation, Liberatore said.

65 to 70 percent of UMass students receive some form of financial aid.

"If Gramm-Rudman is enacted, fewer people will receive Student Loans, Pell Grants, and Student Educational Opportunity Grants," Liberatore said. "With any further cuts, many students would not be back next semester, including myself," she said.

There is a way to obtain a commission as a Marine Officer other than through ROTC called the Platoon Leaders Class (PLC).

The PLC Program requires no interruption of your academic career.

This program is open to all undergraduates.

The PLC program requires no special classes, uniforms or drills on campus.

This program is totally voluntary and requires no commitment to active duty unless you want it.

You can be guaranteed flight training if you are physically and mentally qualified.

The starting salary for a Marine Officer is between $18,950 and $23,800 depending on when he or she enters the program.

If you did not know about the PLC program but would like to know more, come to the Marine PLC information session at 6 p.m. tomorow in Campus Center Room 901 or call 1-800-255-USMC.

Receiving a resounding "no" to each of her questions, Rita Addessa of the Philadelphia Lesbian and Gay Task Force, asked the audience: "Should men dominate women? Should whites dominate blacks? Should heterosexuals dominate gays and lesbians? Should the temporarily able-bodied construct barriers against the disabled?"

Marchers chanted slogans like "We've got to beat back the racist attack," and "Stop the war against black America," throughout the two-hour procession.

The marchers demonstrated their militancy when they passed the mounted police and the police station and chanted, "Stop police brutality," and, "The police and the Klan work hand in hand.

"It was a very loud and clear message," said UMass student Tom Neilson. "We're talking about police brutality and we're pointing at you [the police].

"It was not hostile, but it was provocative," he said later.

The marchers carried signs representing a variety of groups. Banners included: "Stop Reagan's racism;" "Budget cuts and union busting;" "Liberte, egalite, homosexualite," Latin for "Liberty, equality, homosexuality;" "Irish Americans against racism" and "Union of the homeless."

Students from Brandeis University, New York University, Smith College, Pennsylvania State, Temple University, Princeton University and Howard University also carried banners, and according to the organizers about 15 other colleges were represented.

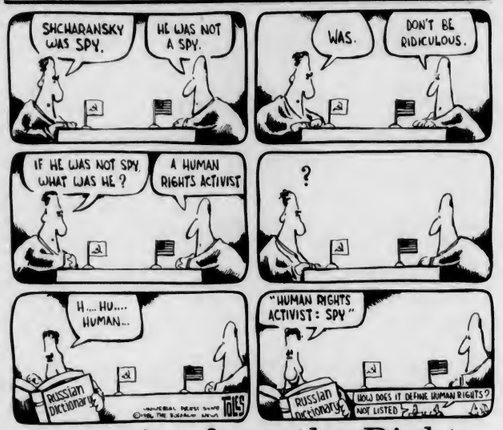
The unions seek power

Rusty Denton

I can't remember a semester in years where unions have not been front-page news at UMass. The Lord Jeff is the most recent, but there have been ruckus-raisings over unions for students, for professors, for state workers, for the Kellogg Brush factory, J.P. Stevens, the printing co-op in town, Fitzwilly's in Northampton, Coors Beer, and Red Coach lettuce. Interestingly enough, union loyalty doesn't prevent local activists from buying huge numbers of foreign cars, but I'm sure they have their excuses.

Excuses aside, if I understand union rhetoric correctly, I am probably in agreement with several of their stated aims — reasonable wages, healthy working conditions, humane management and occasional time off. But I am not so sure that the unions mean what they say. In the case of Coors, for instance, management has apparently voluntarily given their workers pensions, wages, recreational facilities and working conditions which surpass the industry standards, and have been rewarded by Coors workers decertifying the union. If the workers are happy, the union should be happy, right? Wrong. The union lost dues, members and the right to claim responsibility for keeping labor happy. The brewery union is very unhappy.



It is plain that the objective of the brewery union and others like it is power — power in politics, power in the marketplace, power for the people. Or more correctly, power for the union officials. Power is free for most of them, anyway. They are selling a commodity for which the union itself pays nothing: labor. Most unions don't guarantee productivity, won't be responsible for absenteeism and often make it exceedingly difficult to give merit raises or fire employees. All incentive is lost, and industry is coerced into buying a faulty labor package.

The results are horrendous. I was in Detroit in 1982 during the recession and talked to hundreds of autoworkers and their families. Most had quit high school to work in the automotive factories, starting at $15 to $20 per hour with no real skills to speak of. They had a bitterness toward Reagan because that was who the unions blamed. They should have been bitter toward the unions for selling them on "the world owes you a good life," and for making U.S. labor costs uncompetitive.

Unfortunately, it is not easy to get out from under the thumb of organized labor, either for the individual worker, or for an industry. An employer with a union agreement generally must take union dues out of every worker's pay, which amounts to petty extortion for those who don't want to join, because otherwise they'd have no job. As far as the employer, he or she may have some genuine fears with regard to what the union might do if the company hired non-union. The indictments against unions and their personnel for violence, extortion, and graft number in the hundreds and thousands.

I'm not saying that all unions are like this, or that the movement started out with such malignant methods. But I do think there is a better way. Too often, the issue has been whether antagonists are pro or anti-union. They've missed the point. A union is a tool, hopefully one that will become obsolete. At issue is how to be pro-labor and pro-business with the same policies. Make the unions competitive, not monopolies. Let them incorporate and guarantee sales or higher productivity if they're going to demand higher wages. It is not right for investors to take all the risks and then have their hands tied by dictates from a union which is insulated from risk, especially since unions are big business themselves these days.

Hypocrisy from the Right

John Hayes

Over the last three semesters, Peter Dow has rather repetitively "illuminated" the UMass community as to the evils of the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. He has charged them with aiding the rebels in El Salvador, massacring the Miskito population, and setting up a dictatorship with no political freedoms, among other things.

Despite the fact that Dow somehow manages to include all this in every column, it is impossible to respond to all of this at once, for the simple reason that no realistic view of a situation as complex as Nicaragua's can be achieved in less than 60 lines. Indeed, such a structure seems to play right into Dow's argument, which is clearly more creative than well-informed. However, a few simple points will serve my purpose here.

For instance, he claims that thousands of Miskito Indians have been tortured and murdered by the Sandinistas. But Amnesty International has somehow missed that, for they make no mention of it. Beyond several unconfirmed allegations of beatings, Amnesty saw no evidence from 1979 to 1983 of torture or murder of the Miskito population — and they could not possibly miss something on the scale of what Dow describes. Further, America's Watch, a U.S. based human rights agency, denies that any Miskitos were tortured or killed — in a report that is harshly critical of the Sandinistas. The only group that claims that these massacres have occured is the Reagan administration. Let's use some common sense. Evidence of atrocities in El Salvador and Guatemala is manifest in the refugees flooding this country illegally. Where is the similar flood from Nicaragua, fleeing torture and murder? They would be welcome by the Reagan administration — if they existed.

Where things really get bizarre is in Dow's comparison of democratic freedoms in El Salvador and Nicaragua, especially in terms of the recent elections. However, two independent and bipartisan groups declared the Nicaraguan elections to be a success. They noted that while everyone was required to register, no one was required to actually vote. The opposition parties had ample ability to advertise in the papers and radio, the censorship of La Prensa was almost non-existent, the candidates were not intimidated and the voters were offered a wide spectrum of candidates to choose from, despite the boycott by the four main opposition parties. The only group that has claimed that the elections were a fraud has been, of course, the U.S. government, which incidentally refused to send observers to the elections, as Nicaragua asked them to do.

Compare this to the elections in El Salvador, which Dow appears to believe were fair. At the time of the elections, there was no freedom of speech or assembly, most of the candidates had been killed or forced into the underground by the death squads, labor organizations and other groups had been similarly forced out of existence, all persons were required to vote, and the ballot boxes were clear glass containers, which, as the military had access to the polling places, served to intimidate the voters. Moreover, Dow praises the Duarte government for the progress it has made in curbing the military and death squads — this solely due to the drop in the number of disappearances or tortures since the early 1980s. How does that compare to the progress Nicaragua has made since 1979 — no more death squads or National Guard, no more elite sucking the blood from the population. Dow admits the great strides Nicaragua has made in health care and education. So where is the real progress?

There has been a curtailment of freedoms in Nicaragua. But a truly warped view of the situation is one that ignores the role of the U.S. in forcing these actions. Nicaragua is in a state of war, and most nations in similar circumstances suspend normal rights, censor the press, limit the judiciary (as Britain does in Northern Ireland), and force groups to move from threatened areas.

You would never hear Dow criticize the U.S. for doing the same things during a state of war. This does not serve to justify these actions by Nicaragua — only place them in context. And context is the biggest thing Dow ignores, for only in that way could he have you believe his heart bleeds for Nicaragua, while in the same breath, he justifies South Africa and El Salvador. I guess death for America's sake is still OK, especially when they're the ones dying.

A matter of principles

Daniel Valianti

A wide range of political views are represented in the SGA, which is essential on a campus as big as ours. Diversity in the SGA should allow problems to be solved more efficiently, for the basic reason that more ideas on how to solve problems from different perspectives are free-flowing and enhance the political potential at the University. On the other hand when this diversity becomes extremist, it clouds the best interest of the student body, and something is seriously wrong.

For example, issues such as tuition, concerts, changes in RSOs, funding and other campus policies should always take precedence over world issues.

I have nothing against discussing politics, or any world issues like Nicaragua, Philippines, Northern Ireland, etc. In fact, I think a university is the best place to discuss these issues. However, discussing them on the floor of the governing body of this University, while issues that more directly affect students in their every day life get neglected is not what I call working for the best interests of fellow students. Student representatives are supposed to do just that, represent us, the "UMass student." Are the best interests of the students served when these representatives allow their egos and extreme individual political ideologies to hamper the governmental process? I must point out here that this is not a problem pertaining only to the extreme left or the extreme right; both share the blame, because it would seem they have little concern for working together. Think about the potential, though, of the whole SGA working together to solve common student problems. Think about it. I did.

While I respect SGA members who do take the time to discuss world-wide political issues, and furthermore would be happy to discuss these issues with them, I think the best place for a forum is anywhere on campus outside the Senate doors.

When the SGA and the presidents have figured out a way to balance the SATF budget, maybe then we can talk about Nicaragua on the Senate floor.

When it does not take months to appropriate money for a concert fund, which affects a large percentage of students, then we can talk about Northern Ireland.

When questions of a tuition increase and disbursement of SATF funds have been brought up, debated, discussed and dealt with effectively, let's have a discussion of the Philippines.

As elected representatives of the student body, as a whole SGA members (all of them) must put UMass first and "get our own house in order."

First UMass and then the world. It's simply a matter of priorities.

All Peoples Congress: Force behind march

By BARBARA DeLOLLIS
Collegian Correspondent

PHILADELPHIA — The March Against Racism in Philadelphia, primarily organized by the Philadelphia branch of the All Peoples Congress, sent a clear message to the Reagan administration that the people will no longer tolerate racist violence, Erskine Nero, a national organizer for APC, said Saturday.

"Today's National March will send a clear message to the administration at large that the people won't play dead," Nero said. "We can come together and fight against racism, sexism, and discrimination."

The APC was the main force behind the formation of the National Mobilization Against Racism, which organized the march that brought approximately 3,500 people to this "City of Brotherly Love" Saturday.

Last spring's fire bombings aimed at the radical group MOVE and recent arson at Jewish community centers here were reasons for the location of the march.

The idea of the APC was born on May 3, 1981, during the March on the Pentagon in Washington, D.C., according to Phil Wilayto, spokesperson for the APC.

The response to the march was so overwhelming, (100,000 attended) that in November of that same year, a convention was called in Detroit. The 3,000 people who attended this convention established the APC, said Wilayto.

The APC is a national People's Fightback Movement, founded in 1981 to "combat the Reagan program of racism, cutbacks and war," according to a pamphlet published at the group's New York headquarters.

Nero said that the APC is anti-war, unless it was the rising of the working class against the bosses. The group organizes campaigns and demonstrations for causes such as racism, apartheid, women's rights, unions, and lesbian and gay rights, he said.

"This is just the beginning of the movement; the struggle against racism," Nero said.

The APC publishes a national monthly paper called Fighting Back, which was distributed during the march, as was anti-racism banners and pins.

The APC is considered by many to be top organizers of protests.

Numerous peacekeepers, (people who are trained in non violence tactics) sporting yellow armbands, lined the march to help keep the protesters off the sidewalk, and to neutralize any antagonizers.

BIBLIOFILE

By BRAD VERTER

Welcome to the first installment this semester of Bibliofile, a weekly column featuring short reviews of significant books. Bibliofile will appear on Tuesdays: Although today is Monday for UMass, we're pretending it's Tuesday. This week: biographies and memoirs of jazzmen and poets.

Leslie Gourse: EVERY DAY; THE STORY OF JOE WILLIAMS. (Quartet, $15.95)

Count Basie with Albert Murray: GOOD MORNING BLUES. (Random House, $19.95)

According to the dustjacket summary of Leslie Gourse's resume, she has written articles for many prestigious magazines, and has authored previously two highly acclaimed books. That may be. However, her most recent work, a biography of jazz vocalist Joe Williams, is so awkwardly written that the style obscures the narrative, making the book unbearable.

Her subject is an interesting one: Joe Williams is one of the great jazz vocalists, singing most notably with Count Basie's band. Her treatment of the material, however, leaves much to be desired. The book is rife with errors. For instance, a chronology in the front claims that Williams was married in 1943 at age 20, although he was born in 1918 (1918 plus 20 equals 1938). There is a photograph of him with several other people including a middle-aged woman with dark hair who is clearly not Nancy Sinatra, as the caption claims.

Furthermore, Gourse talks down to her readers: she vainly attempts to capture the blues vernacular. She entitles one chapter "Goin' to Chicago," which wouldn't be so bad if she was consistant: the following chapter is "Moving on the Scene." Another chapter is called, "Love and Lebensraum in Las Vegas." The allusion to "Fear and Loathing" is uncalled for, and the use of the word lebensraum is inexcusable. Equally inexcusable are her "you will recall's" and her "dear reader's" and all the rest of the numerous idiosyncracies of her condescending style.

The strange thing is, Williams seems so lucid whenever he is quoted-- those passages are jewels shining from the slimy adulterated rock of Gourse's narrative-- and the reader wonders how Gourse ever got involved. The dustjacket's praise of Gourse leads the reader to question the standards maintained by jazz writers: To paraphrase Stephen Spender's remark on T.S. Eliot, Gourse is apparently the best we have, but what a pity she's the best.

The discography is the only valuable part of this work: the rest of the book should be pulped.

The difference between Every Day and Count Basie's autobiography, Good Morning Blues is the difference between cacophony and melody. Filled with fascinating anecdotes spanning his fifty-year career as jazz pianist and bandleader until his death in 1984, Basie's book is candidly written, meticulously researched and altogether engaging. Basie's narrative is natural and unstrained.

Even for those who believe in destiny, there is no such thing as a life not lived by trial and error; by improvisation. Basie's music is noted for its improvised brilliance. The tales of his experience are no less scintilating. One reads of his life with everyone who was ever anybody in jazz, and is left dazzled by the splendid frenziedness of it all.

Stephen Spender: JOURNALS 1939-1983. (Random House, $19.95)

Stephen Spender was knighted in 1983. I'm not really sure why. He edited Horizon magazine with Cyril Connolly, and later co-edited Encounter. He wrote several slim volumes of mediocre poetry (collected in a companion book, Collected Poems, 1928-1985) and several much-lauded volumes of criticism. He traveled widely and held many professorships. Why was he knighted? Because, I think, of his friends: He knew just about every writer of this century, from Auden to Yevtushenko; from W.B. Yeats to Allen Ginsberg. His journals are an account of meeting after meeting, of party after party, of discussion after discussion, of affair after affair.

Spender's journals are honest and revealing; he relates, along with his personal triumphs, his less pleasant experiences -- Virginia Woolf's distaste for him, his wife's affairs. His commentary is insightful, but not always interesting. Spender omits a great deal of literary gossip for his critical views. He talks incessantly of his life-long friends W.H. Auden, Christopher Isherwood and Isaiah Berlin, but refuses to mention Wyndham Lewis, except in passing ("X and I talked about Lewis").

There are many noticable details missing also from his personal life. He starts the journals with reminisces of Weimar Berlin, but does not touch upon his experiences fighting in the Spanish Civil War. He wrote a book, Learning Laughter, about life on a kibbutz. His journals ignore the book, and do not mention Israel at all, although they make reference to about every other country. For all their honesty, Spender's journals are overly self-conscious in their attempt to be literary and intelligent. This makes for good reading, but leaves a sour taste.

Gallagher to run for Tip's seat

BOSTON, (AP) — A state representative became the fifth legislator to join a crowd of notables yesterday, including the scions of two famous politicans, competing in the primary race for the congressional set held by House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill.

State Rep. Thomas Gallagher, D-Allston, announced his candidacy for the 8th Congressional District seat at a rally in a Boston housing project attended by at least seven neighborhood activists whom Gallagher described, in a jab at his rivals, as "people who are not the people in People magazine.

"Others who have announced their candidacy for the 8th congressional seat have said they can win because they are rich and can buy attention, or because they represent a large part of the district and deserve the attention," Gallagher said in a news release.

More than a dozen people have entered the Sept. 16 primary race for the seat of O'Neill, who is retiring from Congress.

Among Gallagher's rivals are four state legislators; a Boston city councilor; businessman Joseph P. Kennedy II, son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy; attorney James Roosevelt Jr., grandson of president Franklin D. Roosevelt; and professional comedian Lenny Clarke.

Gallagher, 38, is a three-term state representative and long-time community activist who said he supports sheltering refugees from Central America and imposing tougher guidelines for nerve gas research at the Arthur D. Little Co. in Cambridge.

Before you make a long distance commitment, make sure you know what you're getting into.

If Fletcher Christian and Captain Bligh had known what being stuck in the same boat would mean, chances are neither would have set foot aboard.

And if you're stuck in the same boat with a long distance company that doesn't give you all the services you need, it's easy to harbor mutinous thoughts.

But when you pick AT&T as your long distance company, you know you're in for smooth sailing. You'll get trouble-free, reliable service. Immediate long distance connections—even at the busiest hours. And long distance operators to assist you with immediate credit for wrong numbers and collect calling.

And you'll get discounts off our Day Rate on your state-to-state calls. With savings of over 50% during weekends until 5pm Sundays, or nights from 11pm to 8am, Sunday through Friday. And 40% discounts evenings between 5pm and 11pm, Sunday through Friday.

UMass whipped by St. Joseph's

It would be best to just forget about this one.

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team took its worst beating at home since 1981 on Saturday night, losing 85-50 to powerful St. Joseph's.

Leading only at 2-0, the Minutemen suffered a controlled, methodical beating. St. Joe's was near perfection, running its 10 point halftime lead of 32-22 to a 20-point lead of 44-24 with 15:20 left in the game thanks to a 12-2 run.

Senior swingman Maurice Martin, the Hawks' All-American candidate, led all scorers with 23 points while sophomore center Rodney Blake ruled the inside for St. Joe's with 21 points and eight rebounds.

Lorenzo Sutton had 14 for the Minutemen, but was the only player in double figures for UMass. The Minutemen were helpless under the boards, being outrebounded, 46-28.

The Minutemen had their three game winning streak snapped, but more importantly saw their chance to move up in the Atlantic 10 standings.

A victory would've put UMass at 7-8, tied with Duquesne for fifth place. Instead, UM fell to 6-9, tied with George Washington for sixth. The Minutemen fell to 9-14 overall.

St. Joe's climbed to 14-2 in the A-10 and 20-4 overall. They also took over first place in the league and won 20 games for the 14th time in their history, including five of the last seven years.

UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen, while unhappy with the loss, did see some silver linings.

"I think if we had shot the ball better in the first half, the run we made in the second half may have caused Temple some problems," said the coach. "We dug ourselves too big a hole with the shots we missed. They play a great matchup zone. It's one of the best in the country. I think we'll be ready for our next two, we proved tonight we can play with a good team."

"This was a tough one, but hey, we're young and they're a good team," said Smith. "We're getting better despite what our record says. If we stick with it, we're going to be a good team. We just have to stick with it."

Minuteman Mutterings: Smith, with a game-high nine assists, is now within one of tying the UMass career-record of 518 set by the late Alex Eldridge. Smith will set the record in 83 games, it took Eldridge 102 games. Smith is averaging 7.2 assists-per-game, 7.4 in the league.

167.05-166.90 on Saturday at Springfield.

The Minutemen victory over MIT was especially important because the UMass team consisted soley of freshman and sophomores.

"The freshmen and sophomore team did outstanding," said UMass assistant coach Ken Dougherty. "It really paves the way for our future."

An outstanding performance by Jay Ronayne in the all-around was the team's main highlight in the MIT meet. Ronayne, a sophomore, scored a 48.8, his high score in all-around collegiate competition.

In the Minutemen's narrow victory over the Orangemen, Timmy Myers scored the high all-around tally in the meet with a 48.75, his collegiate all-around high.

UMass is now 5-4. Their next opponent is Temple in Philadelphia next Sunday.

The women were on the up side of a narrow meet for a change, defeating Springfield College by less than two tenths of a point.

The Minutewomen are now at 3-4 for the season, and next face Southern Connecticut State University next Saturday.

Minutemen fall short, 58-47

Late run unable to sink Temple

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Freshman forward Duane Chase goes up strong in last night's game against Temple at the Cage. The Minutemen lost to the Owls, 58-47.

Despite falling into a deep first half hole, the University of Massachusetts made Temple University earn a tough victory last night, 58-47 before 3,371 at the Curry Hicks cage.

UMass trailed 10-0 in its last regular season home game of the season,, unable to score until 13:59 remained in the first half. The Owls led by as many as 19 in the opening period, but the Minutemen, with a gutsy second half comeback, drew to as close as six before bowing in the game's final minute.

The Minutemen have now lost two straight and stand at 9-16 overall, 6-10 in the Atlantic 10 Conference. Thanks to George Washington beating Rutgers, UM is now in seventh place in the league, a game out of sixth. Two more regular season home games are left before the A-10 tourney, this Thursday at West Virginia and Saturday at Duquesne.

"No game is easy for Temple, every team is ready for us," said Owl coach John Chaney, who saw his team go to 21-4 overall and 13-3 in the league. "UMass proved to be very tough in the second half. They showed they were mentally tough. They're young, they'll improve."

The loss however, was tough to take for UMass.

"We killed ourselves with the way we played early," said sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton. "We let them get way up on us and emotionally we didn't have it in us to complete our comeback. I think if we were coming back from ten or 12 instead of 17, we could've made some trouble."

Sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton led UMass with 16 points, the Minuteman's only player in double figures. Freshman forward Duane Chase had eight points and a game-high 12 rebounds. For Temple, Tim Perry had 14 on six-of-six shooting from the floor. He also had a team-high five rebounds. Guards Howie Evans and Nate Blackwell contributed 12 and 10 respectively for the Owls.

Temple, forcing the ball inside, went up 10-0 before Sutton put UMass on the board with a 19-footer from the left baseline with 13:59 left. Playing without their leading rebounder, freshman forward David Brown (who missed his first start of the season with strained stomach muscles), the Minutemen struggled on offense in the game's early going, unable to hits its second field goal until Tom Emerson came off the bench to hit a 15-footer from the right corner with 11 minutes left.

The Temple lead grew to one of 19, 33-14, on Darrin Pearsall's offensive rebound and layup with 2:19 to go in the half. The period ended with the Owls holding a 34-20 advantage.

UMass shot a putrid eight-of-29 from the floor in the period and an equally miserable four-of-eight from the line. Fitzhugh Tarry, who drew his first start in place of Brown, was the worst culprit at 0-for-7, but was hammered several times in going up for layups, but wasn't allowed to go to the line. The officials let the boys play for much of ther game, allowing rough play under the boards to go unnoticed.

Tarry, a 6-8 redshirt freshman from Buffalo, did play a strong game overall, scoring five points and grabbing eight rebounds. He played all 40 minutes and did a nice job defensively.

The second half saw the Owl lead fluctuate between ten and 15 until Smith hit a double-pump prayer in the the paint that made it 45-37 with 9:14 to go.

The Minutemen pared the lead down to six twice, the first time at 47-41 on Sutton's top of the key jumper and again at 53-47 on a Smith drive with 2:04 left.

The Owls then missed, Tarry snared the rebound and UMass had a chance to cut it to four. With 1:09 left, a Smith pass went out-of-bounds off Tarry's foot in a mix-up with Sutton. Temple came back with Evans being fouled by Sutton with 43 seconds left.

The sophomore sanks both his shots to make it 55-47. The Minutemen came down and turned it over again, this time with 39 seconds left as Smith unsuccessfully tried to force it to Sutton on the right baseline. Sutton was forced to foul, grabbing Perry, who sank both and Temple was back in control, 57-47.

"Those werre tough plays, but they're plays that I think we'll make in the future," said Smith. "We're a good team, but we were in too big a hole to get out of."

Minutewomen fall to Owls, 74-66; host URI tonight

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

More often than not, a coach is pretty upset when his or her team loses its fourth straight game and ninth straight conference game.

But University of Massachusetts women's basketball coach Barbara Stevens was pleased with her team's performance, as the Minutewomen dropped a 74-66 Atlantic 10 decision to Temple University on Friday night at the Cage.

"I think we played pretty well," Stevens said. "Overall, it was a good game, but they just went inside on us and got too many rebounds on us in the second half."

UMass will host the University of Rhode Island tonight at 7:30 at the Cage. The Minutewomen were 71-69 winners over the Rams when the two teams last met in Kingston. The Rams come into tonight's game 10-12 overall and 2-10 in the conference.

Senior forward Barbara Hebel poured in a season high 28 points for the Minutewomen (9-13 overall, 2-9 in the A-10), most coming from long range. Freshman forward Beth Wilbor added 10 points off the bench. Temple (15-8 overall and 7-6 in the A-10) was paced by Mimi Carroll's game high 29 points and Theresa Govens with 19 points.

The tale of this game could be found in the rebounding statistics. Temple took advantage of the smaller UMass frontline and outrebounded the Minutewomen 49-38, with 20 of those caroms coming on the offensive boards. UMass finished the game with 10 offensive boards.

UMass weekend roundup

Swimmers 6th; gymnasts win pair

By JOE ROBERTS
AND STUART GOTTLIEB

How important was this past weekend's Atlantic 10 championship meet to the University of Massachusetts men's swim team?

Not very apparently as they left the Penn State pool before the final team scores were tabulated.

"I think we came in sixth about three points away from Rutgers," UM coach Russ Yarworth said. The host Nittany Lions won the competition with West Virginia taking second place.

Niether the team nor the coach are disappointed or worried about the times they swam at the meet. "We didn't swim well. It was about what I expected. Muddy (Mark Waters) was sick, Pat (Mullen) didn't dive at all because he has a pulled stomach muscle and John Turner only swam in one event," said the coach.

Not only did the team leave early but, they had mechanical problems with one of their vans and had to put a 21 kids in one truck for the trip home. "It was a miserable ride back, that one van is still in Pennsylvania," Yarworth said.

The Minutemen's best finish was a first place in the 500 freestyle by senior co-captain Drew Donovan with a time of 4:36.96.

Donovan also placed third in the 200 and 100 freestyle events. According to Donovan, he wasn't all that impressed with his places or times.

The whole team wasn't held back as some swimmers had good times.

"A few clicked but not all of them, I didn't expect them all to," Yarworth explained.

Other swimmers that did well were Mike Hoover, Paul Hartnett, and Eric Bebchick. "Hoover did his best 100 breaststroke and Bebchick and Hartnett had their best career times because they were prepared for the meet," Yarworth said.

As a whole the team wasn't at it's best. "We weren't prepared to swim well," Yarworth said. "Their muscles were sore. The whole week before they did tough anerobic work. Now they're going to rest," Yarworth said.

"If we had rested and tapered like some others teams did (George Washington, Temple and Rutgers for instance) then we would have done better. We wouldn't have beaten Penn State or West Virginia. Resting for the Atlantic 10 meet would have kept us from peaking at New Englands, which is the meet I've been stressing all year," Yarworth said.

Even though the meet wasn't that important it was necessary. "The swimmers get to see what championship meets are like. They see what trails and finals are like, it's the experience that's most important," the coach said.

Yarworth also noted that the team might have been affected by the other swimmers' times. "The younger swimmers were a little intimidated by the competition that was already shaved down."

The Minutemen will finish their season at the New England championships (Feb. 28-March 2) at Springfield College.

In other weekend action, the men's and women's gymnastics teams came away from this weekend's competition with their most success all season.

The Minutemen defeated the Massachusetts Institute of Technology here, 233.60-196.75 before traveling to Syracuse and defeating the Orangemen, 239.65-239.35. The Minutewomen defeated Springfield College,

Senate is finally back to business

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Because tonight's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting's agenda is the shortest of the school year, the senate speaker attributes the recent efficiency to the assembly getting "back to business."

"The senate has finally come around to dealing with issues and not personalities," Speaker John Ruddock said. "It's about time the senators put personal differences aside and started working for the students."

Ruddock said that even with tonight's shorter agenda, he hopes that the efficiency increases so motions don't get backed up. He added that senators have independently realized last semester's problems and taken it to heart.

"I think if it's efficiency, recognized as being a turning point by everyone, then the student senate can take this opportunity to change its direction," he said.

One major change in senate meetings, Ruddock said, is that there is less of the excessive debate which continually plagued last semester's meetings. As a result, he said, the senate is able "to get down to business."

Senator Bill Collins, who has been Ruddock's main antagonist in the senate - and who had also been the floor nemesis of previous Speaker Chris Sullivan - said it is the rules change procedure that is making the difference.

The procedure change, originally sponsored by Collins, was passed by the senate Nov. 13. It calls for all business from prior meetings to come up in subsequent meetings first before anything else is considered.

Collins, citing the procedure change's system of disposing all the older business first, said, "I would not attribute the quicker meetings to the speaker."

Eric Ericson, another senator, said he thinks it is more efficient now because less controversial issues have been considered.

"I personally don't see a difference," Ericson said. "I think it depends on the issues week-to-week."

Two boards and two verdicts

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

A hearing board recently found a student guilty for participating in an illegal demonstration in the Whitmore Administration Building in December, after another board found four other students innocent on the same charges.

The five students were among 18 arrested Dec. 5 for refusing to leave the second-floor lobby of Whitmore. The students were holding a sit-in in the lobby to protest the seizure of the Student Activities Trust Fund by Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson and the director of the Student Activities Office, Randy Donant.

Those arrested were charged with holding a mass disturbance and failing to obey an order to disperse.

According to Marc Kenen, an advocate in the Legal Services Office, three of the four found innocent are Alex Zucker, Bill Collins and Christine Alibrandi. The fourth person declined to allow her name to be disclosed, Kenen said.

"It is clear that the administration is desperate to get guilty verdicts," Marc Kenan, an advocate in the Legal Services Office.

Students are entitled to a hearing before an impartial three-member board, with one of the members being a student.

After the four were found innocent by one hearing board, another board with different members found senior Timothy Kress guilty of the same violations, Kenen said.

Under the University code of student conduct, Kress will be placed under probation for a year. According to the code, probation is a period "in which actions of the student are subject to particular scrutiny."

"It is clear that the administration is desperate to get guilty verdicts," Kenen said. "After four not guilty rulings, they changed the board."

"I feel the second board was picked by the administration because of their lack of sympathy toward the students. Apparently they were ready to convict him before walked into the room."

Kenen also said Kress' hearing, which was held in Madson's boardroom in Whitmore -- instead of in the Student Union Building -- came close to jeopardizing his right to a fair trial.

Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, assistant to Madson, said the administration does not have a vendetta against the protestors. She said the second board was established before the first four hearings were held, because the time required would have been a burden for board members.

"The change of space from the Student Union to Vice-Chancellor Madson's board room had to do with the space available. Most of the witnesses were Whitmore personnel. It is more convenient," she said.

She also said that Madson has the authority to overturn the results of the hearings.

Kress was contacted by the Collegian, but declined comment pending appeal proceedings.

The judiciary system is geared against the students, Kenen said. He said it was ridiculous for the administration to pick the student representatives and for the students not to be allowed to use counsel to speak on their behalf.

Century-old stalwart

The Old Chapel has seen it all

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

The Old Chapel has served for 100 years as a landmark of the University of Massachusetts, sharing in the transformation of the University from a small agricultural college to the campus' current status.

The building now houses the Minuteman Marching Band and the performing arts division of the music department, but it was originally constructed for use as a library and place of worship for the Massachusetts Agricultural College.

Providing a variety of uses for the University throughout its history, the chapel has stood by as the campus grew and the students changed. The clock in the chapel has counted the hours in a century, and the chimes, long since silenced, hang motionless in the tower's opening.

Although the hands of the Old Chapel clock now stand still, this will not forever be the case, according to John Ghidinelli, Physical Plant assistant foreman.

"Everything is there," Ghidinelli said. "As we've worked on it, we've tried to eliminate problems."

Housed in an enclosed room in the tower, the brass clock has been plagued with problems in recent years. Pigeons are one of the culprits, Ghidinelli said.

Pigeon droppings covered the clock's movement and gears when a hatch to the tower opening blew off during hurricane Gloria last year, said Dave Rogers, Physical Plant electrician.

Rogers said he has been working on the clock for the past four months. There are two basic problems, he said, referring to the pigeons and the clock's bearings, which hold the gears in place.

The structure's romanesque-gothic design was created by Worcester architect Stephen C. Earle, and the chapel was built in 1886 from Pelham granite and Longmeadow sandstone at a cost of $31,000.

Weekly religious services were moved from the building in 1915 to allow space for a larger library, lecture areas,

Reagan opens drive for more aid to Contras

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan, saying Nicaraguan rebels cannot fight the Sandinista government with "Band-Aids and mosquito nets," opened a campaign yesterday for $100 million in aid to the Contras.

In a meeting with top Republican congressional leaders, Reagan belittled the $27 million in "humanitarian" aid approved for the rebels, known as Contras, and urged an end to restrictions on military support.

Although the President said that the humanitarian assistance has helped "maintaining the pressure of resistance" to the Sandinistas, he added that "more effective" aid is necessary.

"You can't fight attack helicopters piloted by Cubans with Band-Aids and mosquito nets," Reagan said in a statement read to the lawmakers.

Congress in 1984 banned military aid or ammunition for the Contras and required that the money approved be used exclusively for medical suppplies, clothing and transport trucks. From the end of 1981 until the spring of 1984, the United States provided about $80 million in covert aid.

Reagan repeatedly has asserted that the Sandinista leadership is formenting revolution and communism in Central America, backed by Cuba, the Soviet Union, Libya and North Korea.

Manuel Cordero, minister-counselor of the Nicaraguan Embassy in Washington, termed Reagan's decision to seek a resumption in military aid "a slap in the face" to eight Latin American nations that have urged the United States to back peace talks in the region.

During his remarks on Nicaragua, Regan was flanked by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel, R-Ill.

After the session, which involved some 20 members of Congress, Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said that Reagan had called for $70 million in logistical and other non-lethal aid.

"I think it's a good program," Lugar told reporters.

"We have to decide whether we are going to have a Soviet base on this continent or not," he said. "Esentially we are going to have one if the Contras are not successful."

Lugar, noting that the current funding for humanitarian assistance to the Contras expires March 31, said he thought Reagan's formal aid request for the rebels in Nicaragua would be made in the near future.

Michel told reporters Reagan asked that the $70 million in military aid be administered "at his discretion," or secretly.

"There's some things that frankly ought to be done that can't be all that open and be effective," Michel said in defense of handling the military aid in a covert manner.

Life sentence for sailor

NEWPORT, RI (AP) - A black sailor yesterday was sentenced to life in prison for fatally stabbing a white lieutenant in the back aboard a Navy frigate at sea.

Petty Officer 3rd Class Mitchell T. Garraway Jr. was spared the death penalty by an eight-member military jury that deliberated four hours.

The same panel convicted Garraway, 22, of Suitland, MD, on Jan. 30 of premeditated murder in the slaying of Lt. James K. Sterner with a foot-long Marine survival knife.

Garraway showed no emotion as Cmdr. Jean R. Kendell, president of the jury, read the sentence, which includes his dishonorable discharge and the forfeiture of pay.

"I'm satisfied with the decision they made today, but I'm very disappointed with the decision they made on the premeditated murder conviction," Garraway said outside the building.

The sailor had testified he "just snapped" when he attacked the 35-year-old officer June 16, 1985, in a dark passageway while the USS Miller cruised off Bermuda.

Garraway faced either life imprisonment or the death penalty. The Navy has not used capital punishment since two 1849 hangings. The last military execution was in 1961, when the Army hanged a private for murder.

The hulk of a car shattered by a bomb is inspected last night outside the US embassy by an American embassy diplomat.

Bomb explodes at US Embassy in Portugal

LISBON, Portugal (AP) - A bomb placed in the car of a US Embassy employee exploded yesterday in the embassy compound, sending flames and shattered metal slashing through the air but causing no injuries, guards reported.

State Department officials in Washington said the bomb was discovered during a routine check by a security guard and was located in the trunk of a car of an American or Portuguese employee of the embassy.

The officials said the car was moved to an isolated area in the compound where the bomb went off.

"There was no indication of any material loss except for the car," said one official, who spoke with the condition he not be identified.

He said no one asserted responsibility for the bombing, but embassy officials suspected the Popular Forces of April 25 FP-25, a left-wing Portuguese group, and not a Middle East terrorist organization.

The embassy declined to identify the employee or give his position with the embassy or nationality.

A US diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the man whose car was bombed was a friend of his and he was safely away when the device went off. It was not known if the driver had left the vehicle for the security check, or was warned to get out after the device was found.

The diplomat said the bomb probably had been placed in the car while it was parked somewhere in Lisbon outside the embassy, and was set to explode in the street.

The embassy building itself, a brick and concrete structure formally dedicated last year, was more than 100 yards away and was apparently untouched by the blast.

The US Embassy, which is headed by former US Information Agency director Frank Shakespeare, is on the northern outskirts of Lisbon. Under construction for over four years, it replaced a downtown apartment building that was considered security risk.

The new structure was reported to have been built with such strict security standards that window panes were thick enough to prevent potential spies with telescopes in a nearby hotels from taking long-lens photographs of documents on embassy diplomats' desks.

It was the third time in two years that the new embassy had been the target of an attack. In the first of the other two attempts, a bazooka shot was fired at the embassy walls. In the second, a passing car sprayed the walls of the heavily guarded compound with bullets.

The other two attempts were claimed by FP-25, whose alleged members have been standing trial for the past two months in Lisbon.

Congress asked to cut aid

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress was asked yesterday to immediately halt all US aid to the Philippines as a way to "withdraw US taxpayer support of the corrupt, authoritarian regime" of President Ferdinand Marcos.

But the White House said it was "far premature" to cut off aid to one of America's closest allies in the Pacific, despite the controversy over the Feb. 7 election.

White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan indicated the administration will not take any steps in the Philippines until it hears from presidential envoy Philip Habib, who is in Manila.

Budget office wants $37b cut

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress was told yesterday it must cut $37 billion from existing programs to meet fiscal 1987 deficit targets, but lawmakers said the Congressional Budget Office estimate was too optimistic and could hurt the push for reducing red?ducing budget deficits has improved dramatically since last summer," CBO director Rudolph G. Penner told the Senate Budget Committee.

Congress' new deficit-reduction law, although facing a court challenge, was helping its own goal by promoting lower interest rates and strength in the economy, he said.

Penner's estimate of a $7 billion gap between projected spending and the $144 billion deficit target in the new law was about $1 billion less than the Reagan administration estimated.

The CBO asumed 3.6 percent growth in the Gross National Product, not as optimistic as the Reagan administration. Moderate inflation and declining long-term interest rates were also predicted in the CBO report.

Unlike the president, however, CBO assumed that military spending will rise only to cover inflation.

Cocaine talk at Hampshire

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The number of people using cocaine has risen in the past 10 years while the use of other drugs has decreased, largely because of cocaine's mystique, an authority on the drug said last night at Hampshire College.

"Cocaine has become the Cadillac of drugs," Jeffrey F. Shore said before a gathering of 10 people at Patterson Hall.

"People have come to associate cocaine with success. Cocaine exudes success," Shore said. "Trying to succeed in the business world is to be on top, on the edge, and full of energy. For that, cocaine is the ideal drug."

"When you think of angel dust, you think of scum. Not many people use angel dust anymore because of the public's attitude toward it," Shore said.

Shore earned his bachelor's degree from Hampshire in 1985 after doing field work for five years. Currently, Shore is the director of community relations and coordinator of the Aftercare Drug Abuse Treatment Services for the Regent Hospital in New York City.

Many people believe that cocaine is a harmless, non-addictive drug, but heavy use of the drug causes euphoria, followed by severe depression, he said.

"When in a depressed state, it feels as though the only way out of it is more cocaine.

"Eventually the need to end the depression becomes stronger than the basic needs of survival. Eighty percent [of users] surveyed said they prefer coke over food, conversation, and sex."

Shore said laboratory monkeys, which were supplied with unlimited amounts of the drug, used it continuously until they died. "Cocaine is the only way to get a monkey to commit suicide," he said.

The government estimates cocaine has been used by 25 million people in this country, with 10,000 people addicted to it.

In 1983, Shore was one of the founders of 800-COCAINE, a toll-free, 24-hour-a-day information service for cocaine users. Shore said they expected to receive 10,000 calls a year, but after anouncing the start of the program on national television, 1000 called up the first day. The service receives 1,400 calls each day.

Annual job fair to open today

By LUCINDA COUTO
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Career Center is sponsoring its third annual Summer and Semester Cooperative Education Job Fair for students from 10:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. today at the center, located in Fraternity-Sorority Park.

"The purpose of the fair is to offer a wide variety of majors access to the resources of our program and an opportunity to meet with employers in a convenient format," said Joan Stoia, director of the center.

Twenty companies will participate in the fair, including IBM, General Electric Plastics, Natick Laboratories, the Boston Stock Exchange, Army Corps of Engineers, and People's Express.

The fair will offer both individual company presentations and information tables at the center to inform students in all majors of employment opportunities.

Students are required to have a grade point average of at least 2.0 and have completed an application at the center to participate in the fair.

"The program is for students who want to use a summer or semester to work at a job which will prepare them for their chosen career field. It is not work in exchange for credits, but for pay," Stoia said. The range is slightly below entry level; for instance, if a position pays $18,000 for entry, a co-op job would pay about $15,000, she said.

The office was founded in 1982 as a spinoff of the Internship Office. It has been dealing with virtually the same companies since 1983, with the exception of two that have recently joined the program: the Westford Regency Hotel and Eastern Dairy Deli. The Boston Globe has been a regular employer of co-op students from UMass, Northeastern University and other schools.

The Co-op Office has three staff members who recruit employers. They search out employers both in and out of state who are willing to consider hiring students.

Adams to lecture on nuclear age

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

The former editor of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists will give a lecture at 8 p.m. tonight in the Converse Hall Assembly Room at Amherst College.

Ruth Salzman Adams will lecture on the topic, "Affirming Humanity in the Nuclear Age," as part of a continuing series of lectures this spring on "New Approaches to Peace and World Security" sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

Since 1974, she has been a member of the Council on Foreign Relations in New York City.

Adams is now a private consultant in Washington, D.C., and director of the International Security Program at the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation in Chicago.

She is also an editor of the journal Contemporary China.

Adams has co-edited several books, including The Final Epidemic: Scientists and Physicians on Nuclear War; Human Migration: Policies and Implications; and Debate the ABM.

From 1955 to 1968, and from 1978 to 1984, Adams was the editor of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, a nuclear weapons and arms control journal founded in 1945. A well-known feature of the Chicago-based publication is its "doomsday clock" emblem depicting the level of world tension and likelihood of a nuclear war. In 1945, the clock was set at 12 minutes to midnight; since then the time has changed repeatedly. It now stands at three minutes to midnight, where it was moved in 1984 after arms talks between the US and USSR were broken off.

Adams also served as editorial secretary from 1953 to 1955 of Econometrica, a publication of the University of Chicago.

Nurses scarce for the growing number of aged

By A.V. THOMPSON
Collegian Correspondent

Because the elderly population in society is growing more rapidly than any other age group, there are not enough nurses specializing in caring for the aged, according to a University of Massachusetts nursing professor.

"There has been a huge change in the age of the population. Numbers are increasing the most for people between 80 and 85, so there is a need to attract more graduate nurses to study gerontology," said Ellan Cole, a professor in the gerontology program of the UMass division of nursing.

"Gerontology," said Cole, "is understanding the difference in physiology and psychology of the elderly with information not generally available before."

UMass introduced a master's program in gerontology two years ago. Since then, four nurses have earned degrees and another 15 are now taking the course.

"It's a fairly new program, and it will never be really huge, probably no more than 20 to 25 students," Cole said. But she predicted this increase will enhance the program's position and guard against its removal.

"Gerontology isn't a first choice for nurses. They prefer the more glamorous aspects of nursing and it's hard to find nurses to work with the difficult problems,"

Ellan Cole
professor of gerontology

Cole said that the care of senior citizens today is inadequate. "Often the whole person is not really taken into account by understanding their needs. Yet most nurses have not been properly prepared to do this.

"Nurses have to learn to do a lot of counseling and have to know about the elderly experience, their loss of peers, siblings, and spouses," she said.

Referring to the special needs of the aged, she said, "For example, skin care is critical for the elderly as well as problems like incontinence (problems with bladder and bowel control). Drugs don't clear out of their systems as quickly as with the young, which could lead to overdose.

"When the elderly are confused, this is often labeled as senility. Yet this can be due to their medication or a number of other reasons," she said.

Cole said the main emphasis is on preventive medicine. "Gerontology isn't a first choice for nurses. They prefer the more glamorous aspects of nursing and it's hard to find nurses to work with the difficult problems."

Debra Abel, a graduate nurse on the program, said, "The program's big aim is to keep the elderly in society and in the community by keeping them functioning in their homes."

GOP airs recruiting ads

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Republican Party is looking for you. And if you listen to the radio, they may find you starting late this month when a series of GOP recruitment ads air across the state.

State Rep. Andrew Natsios, who chairs the Republican state committee, announced yesterday that the ads will run for about three weeks at an average of 25 per week. He promised a new version in May and another in the fall.

The script for the debut advertisement asks listeners to compare the lower taxes, home prices and highway tolls in neighboring Connecticut.

"The Massachusetts Republican Party thinks there's a better way to run this state," the ad says. "If you're looking for a better life here in the Bay State, first look for a better party with better ideas to meet the needs of today's Massachusetts."

The ad then provides a toll-free number for more information.

Asked for his reaction, US Rep. Chester Atkins, the Democratic state chairman, said, "I don't find it particularly convincing. I think that they'd do better to concentrate on some constructive ideas rather than just a slick advertising campaign."

Atkins said the comparison to Connecticut was "curious" because the state has a Democratic governor and a higher sales tax than Massachusetts.

The Democrats have no plans for a broadcast recruitment drive of their own, Atkins added.

Plea entered in stabbing

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - An innocent plea was entered in behalf of a 26-year-old woman charged with murder in the stabbing of her fiance.

Betty Jo Hale of Springfield wept yesterday at her arraignment in Springfield District Court.

Her fiance, Ricardo Lawrence, 27, was stabbed shortly before midnight Friday in her apartment and died on the operating table at 4:01 a.m. Saturday from a stab wound to the throat, police said.

Hampden County District Attroney Matthew J. Ryan Jr. said District Judge Alfred A. Barbalunga ordered the courtroom cleared of all spectators except for reporters, court personnel and the defendant's mother because of "some indications" that a relative of the victim was "disgruntled."

Ryan said there were no specific reports of any retaliatory actions.

A bail hearing was set for tomorrow.

Detective Capt. Ernest M. Stelzer said the couple, who had been dating for about four years, were scheduled to be married later this year.

The judge ordered Hale held without bail and ordered a 15-day psychiatric examination.

★ Old Chapel: venerable witness to change

and a chemistry laboratory in the chapel.

In 1935 the Old Chapel was remodeled with a $35,000 federal grant, and the Division of Social Sciences moved into the building's offices and classrooms. The second floor chapel area was reduced and two small classrooms added.

The 90,000-volume library was moved in 1935 to the newly completed Goodell Library, allowing Old Chapel to be used entirely for classrooms, offices, and the upstairs chapel.

In 1958 Old Chapel became an all-faith center, providing facilities for religious counseling by a team of college chaplains. The center also consisted of several lounge areas and reading rooms.

The chapel's tower is also home to one main bell which strikes hourly when the clock is operating, and a set of 10 chimes, weighing over 8,000 pounds.

The chimes are connected to an antiquated hand-operated carillon, now securely padlocked.

An electronic carillion, using loudspeakers instead of the brass chimes to serenade the campus, was in use until 1972, when a noise pollution ordinance was enacted in Amherst, silencing the music.

Now hidden behind music stands and chairs, the carillon is no longer operable, Rogers said.

Ward Hunting, professor of food science and nutrition, was 12 years old when he accompanied his father to the dedication of the chimes in 1937.

"It was real work to play those chimes," he said. "It took so much downward pressure to operate the carillon, the player would lift off the ground as he played. It was awesome to watch a master play those.

Chicken wings to help SAFA, lacrosse team

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

I was blindfolded by three men in trench coats and sunglasses, put into the back of a dark sedan, and driven away.

I was led into a building where the first thing I noticed was the smell of Buffalo-style chicken wings and roast beef. I was in the business known as the Underground Express.

The Underground Express, a recently opened delivery service owned and operated by University of Massachusetts students, donates 25 cents from each sale to the UMass lacrosse team and 10 cents to Students Advocating Financial Aid.

Its founder, Seamus McGovern, said, "We want to provide a service. We're thanking students and people for all their support."

McGovern, a member of the lacrosse team, added, "If it weren't for the lacrosse team and financial aid, I wouldn't be here."

Ray Mello, a co-owner, had a similar opinion: "If we had financial aid, we wouldn't need to go into business."

The six co-owners plan to go with SAFA next month on its annual lobbying trip to Washington, D.C.

All the co-owners -- McGovern, Mello, Steve Swain, Steve Cavanaugh, Dave Higgins, and Fred Dillion -- are roommates. McGovern and Swain are in charge of advertising; Mello and Cavanaugh divide purchasing and bookkeeping; Higgins, a fashion marketing major, is in charge of scheduling and "wing fashion." Dillion handles personnel.

All of the employees, like the owners, are students. None of the six is a hotel, restaurant, and travel administration major or a business student. Two are economics majors.

Underground Express is located at 351 Northampton Road in Amherst, but McGovern stressed that it is a delivery service only.

Carburetor catches on fire

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Staff

A 1972 Oldsmobile suffered $800 in damages at 10:33 p.m., Friday in the PVTA parking garage after its carburetor caught on fire, University of Massachusetts police said.

Two women tried to put out the blaze with a fire extinguisher. The Amherst Fire Department assisted, police said.

In other police reports:

- A 20-year-old man was pushed out of a doorway and down a set of stairs at 1:40 a.m. Saturday, from the Student Union Ballroom. His alleged assailant denied the action and the man was not injured, police said.
- A 1978 Ford received $800 in damages when it was hit at 2:22 p.m. Monday on Governor's Drive. The driver of the Ford, an 18-year-old man, stopped to aid a 21-year-old woman who had driven into a snowbank. While backing out of the snowbank she ran into his car. Her car was not damaged, police said.
- A 1976 Toyota was reported stolen at 10:30 p.m. Saturday from a parking lot adjacent to John Adams Tower. It was found five minutes later in the parking lot beside Washington Tower with the keys in the ignition and the headlights on. A radar detector and leather jacket valued at about $500 were stolen from the car, police said.
- A 22-year-old male student was given a summons for receiving stolen property at 5:24 a.m. Monday on Massachusetts Ave. He was driving a Honda hatchback with a desk belonging to the University in the unlatched rear end, police said.
- Police have the description of persons who tried to break into a pizza deliverer's car at 3:07 a.m. Saturday, outside of Thoreau House. The driver locked his car when he went into the building. They were chased away by student security officers, police said.

"Hello, Nelson Mandela? Are you awake in zer?"

"Of course I'm awake, mahn. Who is it that asks?"

"It is I, zee honorable Prime Minister, P.W. Botha. I am here to make you an offer of freedom. May I come in der?"

"Botha? But what happened to Prime Minister Voerster?"

"Ach du liebe Nelson Mandela, you really must get out more and learn what's happening in der real world. I have been Prime Minister for many years now."

"Okay mahn, come in and tell me of your offer of freedom. There is a seat in the corner if you want..."

"Nein, nein, I don't have to use it just now. Nelson Mandela, do you know how long you have been in prison?"

"No mahn. How long has it been...15 years?"

"Nein dumkopf. You have been in prison for 22 years now, and I – zee great reformer of South Africa – am going to have you released. How do you like zem apples, eh?"

"Oh mahn! To once again be free to carry a passbook. To be able to buy land anywhere that the government assigns me to live. To be able to work at slave wages again... Oh please Prime Minister, grant me the freedom that you speak of!"

"Yes Nelson Mandela, I will grant it, but only under vun condition. Zee South African government, which has served you so well the past 22 years, wants you to do zhem a favor."

The extreme "moral" fringe

William Spain

A popular notion among some of our political and religious leaders is that this country has experienced a moral degeneration over the last few decades. Pointing to an exponential increase in the divorce rate, the proliferation of pornography, and legalized abortion, they maintain that we have lost touch with "traditional values" and are in dire need of a renaissance of same.

While ranting against moral depravity has always appealed to a certain fringe element and (more importantly) makes for a good headline, rarely have these people ever been able to impose their views on the rest of us. Individualists that we are, Americans tend to frown on attempts to legislate our society into one idea of what is "pure." Prohibition was, of course, the biggest exception to this rule in the twentieth century.

Nevertheless, there is a revolving clique of self-appointed guardians of national morality that operates out of the U.S. Senate. Although they consistently go down in defeat when their social agenda reaches the floor, it is important to know who they are and thus, where to apply the necessary boot.

Foremost among these gentlemen (gender stressed) is that right wing darling, Senator Jesse Helms. This North Carolina Republican has, since being elected in 1972, championed various attempts to make the ideology of his unsophisticated, devoutly religious constituency the law of the land. Like many of the more mainstream members of his party, Jesse wants to get government off our backs in the areas of taxation and regulation. Unlike his moderate colleagues, he wants to put it in our bedrooms.

Backing him up is a group of senators with similar ideas of what is right and what is wrong for our collective character. Some of these folks are even further over the edge. Senator Jeremiah Denton, an Alabama Republican, stretched credulity with his 1981 introduction of a bill that would have used federal funds to set up "Teenage Chastity Centers" the length and breadth of the land. Others in the watchdog pack include James McClure (R Idaho), Orrin Hatch (R Utah), Strom Thurmond (R-South Carolina) and Gordon Humphrey (R-New Hampshire). They long to return to the time when God, country and family was our moral bulwark.

Perhaps I am young and ignorant, but I have found these good old days to be most elusive as I delve into our history. At the risk of offending a few with nostalgic memories, I submit that they never existed at all. Sure, there was a time when all the little kids prayed in school, moms and dads stayed together for the duration and abortions were done with coat-hangers. Those were wonderful times and all thinking people should regret their passing but it is important to remember that, in the same period, blacks were in a state of semi-slavery, women were shackled to the home, and "deviates" were in prison.

Those chains have been irreparably sundered over the last 20 years or so. The sound of the shattering has scared a lot of the god-fearing souls in the heartland and sending the aforementioned men to Washington is their reaction. Luckily, it is too late for them to reverse (or even halt) the clock. The conservative revolution draws its strength not from social issues but from economic ones. The would-be patriarchs are squawking on their deathbeds and I, for one, rejoice at their demise. Every revolution of thought and manner brings new bits of nastiness with it. I doubt anyone is happy with the modern prevalence of broken homes and skin flicks but I hold that our advancement on the race issue alone more than makes up for any increases in what certain senators would deem immoral behavior. And, I have faith that we will continue to progress in distancing ourselves from the past they so desperately want to recapture.

Informational picketing a right

A recent column in the Collegian criticized employees of the Lord Jeffery Inn for some union related activities, including carrying picket signs on the UMass campus.

Informational picketing is a constitutional right, a form of freedom of speech, which Lord Jeff employees have used, and will continue to use, to tell the community of our plight.

We did not go on strike at the Lord Jeff, but we picketed informationally, and the community responded sympathetically by boycotting the Inn. I speak for many employees when I say we love the Inn. Many of us have worked there for years, hate being displaced now, and expect to return to work whenever Amherst College or whoever reopens the inn, probably this spring. It is our right to tell the public how we feel.

We feel that Amherst College was underhanded in its dealings with us in contract negotiations. We had almost reached a settlement of the labor dispute on Nov. 1, 1985, but five days later, after Amherst College's big parents' weekend, the Inn's last busy affair of the fall, the college suddenly stonewalled the tentative agreements on all significant negotiating issues, and apparently decided they had a good chance of starving us out over the winter. We considered this very cruel.

It was, as a matter of fact, this reaction that led us to informationally picket one day when we discovered that the Inn's general manager had afterwards been hired to teach students at the hotel school at UMass. We wanted students to know of our experience with this manager and representative of the college.

We do not in any way oppose the hotel school (HRTA) of the UMass campus. We don't dispute its right to hire whomever it wishes as teachers. We just wish it would not have chosen someone who believes the best way to resolve a labor dispute is to stop negotiating, close the plant, and wait for the union to run out of steam.

Well, we're still steamed up. And we're still looking forward to returning to work whenever Amherst College, or whoever, reopens the inn. We greatly appreciate the community's strong support, and hope it will continue. We look forward to serving you in the future as employees of the Inn, as we have in the past.

Concentrate on printing the truth

This letter is in regard to the picture which appeared in last week's Collegian claiming the students photographed were displeased because of a UMass payroll problem. As one of the students photographed, I would like to assert that I was not displeased and resent being portrayed as such.

The Collegian photographer was aware of this fact and assured me a factual caption would accompany the picture if it saw print. I think the Collegian should concentrate on printing the truth instead of creating a false image for its readers.

FALL SEMESTER 1985 DEAN'S LIST

Congratulations to those of you whose names appear below. You have earned a place on the Dean's List by your outstanding academic performance. This honor is accorded to students who achieve a semester average of 3.5 or higher with twelve or more graded credits. Since fewer than 15% meet this high standard, it marks significant accomplishment. Providing the opportunity for academic achievement is the University's highest priority and I am especially pleased, therefore, that you made the most of that opportunity. Your success is a source of pride to the entire University community. Congratulations.

Joseph Duffey, Chancellor

PRESS RELEASES

The Office of Public Information will issue a press release about your Dean's List achievement to your hometown newspaper if you are a Massachusetts resident. Out of state students please pick up a press release form at 200 Munson Hall.

PARENTS DAY

A special program for the parents of students who achieved Dean's List status for the Spring Semester 1985 and/or Fall Semester will be held on Saturday, April 12, 1986, on campus. There will be an all day series of academic and cultural activities, providing parents with an opportunity to sample and experience our educational programs. Details will be forthcoming in mid-march 1986. This event is being coordinated by the Office of Alumni Affairs, 545-2317.

The Dean's List is published under the auspices of the Dean of Students Office, and is based on grades provided by the Registrar's Office as of January 31, 1986. (If your name is not listed and you believe you qualified, based on the stated criteria, please confirm your academic record with the Registrar's Office and bring a copy of such record to the Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore Hall, so that your name can be added. Reminder - graded credits only are included, not Pass/Fail credits.)

Delta Force: flag-flying film

DELTA FORCE (★½) •
Starring: Chuck Norris, Lee Marvin

By KEN LEVINSON
Collegian Correspondent

The trend in Hollywood these days, is to throw an American tough guy into a desperate situation, and with guns and fists-a-flyin' blow away all the commies and/or terrorists. The makers of The Delta Force religiously follow this recipe in Chuck Norris's latest adventure film.

Norris and co-star tough guy Lee Marvin portray the same type of characters we've seen them play over and over and over again. The suporting cast is an all-star collection of Love Boat has-been's and never-were-be's, including; George Kennedy (of Airport fame), Shelly Winters, and Joey Bishop. Winters was so annoying as a Holocaust survivor I almost threw my Coke through the screen (thankfully one of the other stereotype passengers shut her up). Kennedy does a respectable job as a heroic priest, as does Hanna Schygulla as a guilt ridden German stewardess who anguishes over the Holocaust when she is ordered by the terrorists to weed out the Jewish names on the passports.

The only message of this movie is that with enough bullets and beer any crisis can be overcome.

Marshall McLuhan once said that life is a lot like the movies if you see enough of them. If this is true, then Reagan is going to love the Delta Force. Just as Stallone was able to win the Vietnam War, Norris is able to put the fear in God and America into the minds of Arab fanatics.

The Delta Force offers some excitement, and the military hardware is a lot of fun, but don't waste your money. This movie is good HBO fare. So sometime next fall, get some buddies over with a case of Buds, and when you tire of playing darts and watching the Weather channel, flip on the Delta Force and share a few burps.

Violent Femmes: The Blind Leading the Naked (Warner Bros./Slash)

Some stray comments I've heard lately; from a local record store owner: "I'm really torn about the new Violent Femmes album. I can't decide whether I just don't like it or it stinks." A customer in the same store: "The Violent Femmes are one of the few bands who can really push it to the edge and succeed." A college student on a PVTA bus: "So where's the party tonight?"

"The Blind Leading the Naked" is the third Violent Femmes album. Here's some advice to the throngs who are still waiting for a remake of the very popular first album. Stop waiting. You should have suspected that a band as iconoclastic as the Violent Femmes would not look back once they started rolling. The first LP was appreciated mostly by teenagers bursting with hormonal hysteria. After such a delightfully horny debut it was inevitable that the very different second album, "Hallowed Ground", would more or less flop but it's been a year and a half since then and we've all surely matured a bit, haven't we?

"Hallowed Ground" prophesized the spiritual content of a lot of the new songs. Victor De Lorenzo and bassist Brian Ritchie temper what De Lorenzo calls Gano's "undeniable faith" with a keen sense of when to ham it up and when to play it straight. The track with the most religious gusto is called, appropriately, "Faith", a bluesy number which takes Country Joe McDonald's Woodstock era "Fish Cheer" and revises it to "Gimme a F-A-I-T-H." We're dealing with a different "F"word this time around.

I would like to play "Faith" for the Bible-belted audience of the PTL or 700 Club; those exploited dying people who hand over their life savings to the likes of Jim Bakker believing they're buying their way to Heaven. Dispite the song's sincere religious sentiment, they would probably still find it irreverent. I bet God would dig it though.

This album doesn't wear a stiff white collar. It's a swingin' sermon actually. Gano knows full well he won't turn into a pillar of salt if he looks back and acknowledges the lessons he taught and learned on the first album. He hasn't left the spirit of that album entirely behind; young lust, politics, first ladies, friendship, life marriage, death, revolution, cops, and war, to name a few, are all addressed. Talking Heads' Jerry Harrison, who produced the album, tightened up the band's sound quite a bit.

So what's the verdict? I refuse to pass judgement on this record. Like the store owner, I'm torn, except I can't decide whether I just like it or if it's good. I will say one thing though, The Violent Femmes deserve your money more than the PTL Club (or Bruce Springsteen for that matter.) So anyway, where is the party tonight?

BLACK AFFAIRS

Budget hearing gets underway as new procedure casts doubt

By CHRIS ALLEN
Collegian Staff

"I wonder what will be the outcome on March 5" seemed to have been the mystery in everybody's mind last night as the 1987 Student Government Association Budget Hearing got underway.

For nearly five hours a panel of nine budget committee members occupied Room 162 of the Campus Center questioning Registered Student Organizations members as they reviewed their budget package.

Of the nine organizations scheduled to appear for the hearing, eight were represented although by a very small number.

David D. Moore, acting editor-in-chief for Nummo News, a black student newspaper on campus, said that he accidentally heard about the meeting yesterday afternoon and that "if I had been informed about this meeting earlier, I could have contacted more people."

"The procedure of handling the budget hearing has differed from in the past in that at the budget hearing you would normally have an idea of what the result would be" whether it be a level funding, a cut or an increase.

The final results will be presented on March 5

One major concern of many was the fact that there were no minority representatives on the review board.

Moore said that he aplied to be a member of the Budget Committee three times but was denied.

"I have been a member of the senate for one year, I have worked on the Finance Comittee," he said. "I know I have more experience than many people on the committee."

It has been reported that some organizations missed their hearing which was scheduled for yesterday, but it is not known what effect that will have on their budget package.

The organizations scheduled for last night's hearing were Spectrum, Nummo News, the Student Activities Office, SGA Communications, Office of Third World Affairs, Afrik-Am and the African Student Association, which was not in attendance.

Rappers make contribution

Two of the stars of the motion picture "Krush Groove" have teamed up with a major blach hair company to commemorate Black History Month, 1986. Kurtis Blow and Run DMC are the creative force behind "Rapping Black History," a thirty minute audio cassette that's available free in certain popular Johnson Hair Care items.

"Rapping Black History, " is a fun, entertaining, yet educational story that highlights historical milestones and contributions of black Americans. It is delivered in the fast paced rap style that is popular among young people today. Kurtis Blow and Run DMCproven to be an effective way to reach America's youth.

"Rap is their language," says Blow, "and many rappers use it to get stronger messages across...to stay in school, to stay away from drugs and, in this instance, to find out more about who you are and where you come from."

The cassette offer is available through Black History Month at wholesale and retail outlets that sell Johnson Products. Check local hair care outlets for more info...

Civil rights activist blast Reagan

By BRUCE SAXON
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON–The Commissioner of the US Commission on Civil Rights accused the Reagan administration last night of systematically destroying social programs essential for women, minorities and the poor.

"Since 1980, equal rights for women, affirmative action for blacks, and welfare programs for the poor have been under attack," said Mary Francis Berry to more than 100 people at Sage Hall at Smith College.

Berry said that the social programs now under attack originated in the 1930s.

"In the 1930s, the American people decided to remove some of the social inequities then existing in the society, to make America more democratic, to give people more opportunities," she said. "As a result, programs such as unemployment compensation, welfare, and Social Security were instituted"

As a result of the civil rights movements of the 1950s and 1960s, these programs were later strengthened and extended to other groups, Berry said.

Berry spoke as a guest lecturer in honor of Black History Month. Her speech was sponsored by the Black Student Alliance, the Student Lecture Committee, and the Committee on Community Policy.

"Before these programs were instituted, if you were over 45 you could easily be fired from your job and thrown on the ashheap. And if you were a poor women with a sick child, you would have to worry and think 'Is this a $5 or a $25 or a $100 sickness' or if you were a handicapped child, you were discouraged from attending school," she said.

"Progress was made in the 1960s in expanding the rights and opportunities of women, handicapped people, elderly workers, and others," Berry said.

Now, Berry charged, the programs that have helped so many are being dismantled.

"Because of the massive 1981 tax cuts, the budget cuts that followed, and the Gramm-Rudman Bill that was just passed, critical social programs are being destroyed," she said.

Berry said that a new political movement is needed to safeguard the progress make by blacks, women, and others.

"We've been living too long on the fumes of the 60s protests. We cannot do that anymore. The gains we've make in the past will not be renewed until we form a new direct action movement that cuts across racial lines, that demands fundamental change in this country, that demands full equality of opportunity and justice for all," she said.

Canton Does And Doesn't Have Surplus

By Gerry deSimas Jr.

CANTON — Some unanticipated income and some careful spending have helped the town end up with a surplus just over a quarter of a million dollars — $253,090, for the fiscal year that ended June 30 — first selectman Samuel Humphrey said this week.

But a bill of about $179,000, owed to Blue Cross in connection with the town insurance, looms in the background.

The tax collector's office took in $73,000 more than it was budgeted due to payments of back taxes and liens. The town also received $16,000 from the state in road aid, and the town clerk's office added an extra $12,000 to the coffers.

A mild winter saved over $10,000 in plowing and overtime costs, and the Board of Education ($60,000) and the Board of Selectmen ($162,000) and the ...

Individual winners included freshman Pam Hughes in the 55 meter dash with a 7.28. Second was UM's Joyce Baten with a 7.40.

Hughes also won the long jump with a 17-9 with Kim baten third at 17-1. Joyce baten was fourth. The 1,500 saw Julie Ott win with a 4:51.36. Other UMass winners included Kim Baten in the 55 meter hurdles in 8.31 and Kayla Morrison in the 400 with a 59.32.

Finally, the last individual winner was Sonja Vaughan in the 800 meter run with a 2:17.24.

Other places for UMass were Carla DeSantis with a fourth in the shot, a second for Julie Muccini in the high jump at 5-2, a fourth for Kathy McCrory in the 3,000. a second for Muccini in the triple jump and a second for Barbara Cullinan in the 500 with Sue Goldstein taking third..

In the relays, Vaughan, Marshall, Morrison and Bates won the mile in 3:56.89 while Cullinan, Goldstein, McCrory and Ott took the two mile in 9:52.07.

"It was a good meet for us, we had some good efforts," said UMass coach Kalekeni Banda. "Now we get ready for the New Englands."

Jim Reinertson, the Aggies' valuable reserve guard, came off the bench to score 12 points.

"Jim, all of our bench in fact, have been big keys to our success," said Leaman. "They give us players that keep up the intensity and bring our tempo to the other team."

The Aggies, who have now won three games in a row, won several tournament honors, led by Lingenberg being named as the most valuable player.

Alberini and Collamore were also honored with all-tourney selections.

"Those players had great tournaments," said Leaman. "It shows how well we did by placing three of our five starters on the all-tournament team."

Stockbridge closes its season tonight against Holyoke Community College. The game is scheduled for 7 p.m. at the Curry Hicks Cage.

"We had a good season, it's a lot of fun for me personally to keep on coaching. It's tough only having players for two years (Stockbridge is a two-year program), but we do what we can and play a schedule that can be pretty tough at times," said Leaman. "But the kids all give 100 percent, and that's all I can ask of them."

Minutewomen's slump continues

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

This one really hurts.

Senior captain Jerrie Bernier missed a game tying free throw with :01 second remaing, allowing the University of Rhode Island to escape from the Curry Hicks Cage with a 70-69 thriller over the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, last night.

The loss was the fifth straight for UMass and the tenth consecutive defeat in the Atlantic 10. The Minutewomen fell to 9-15 overall and 2-11 in the conference

Bernier enjoyed her best game of the season, pumping in a season high 22 points and grabbing a game high 11 rebounds to lead the Minutewomen. Senior forward Barbara Hebel added 14 points and senior guard Juanita Matthews and freshman forward Beth Wilbor chipped in 13 and 12 poinys respectively.

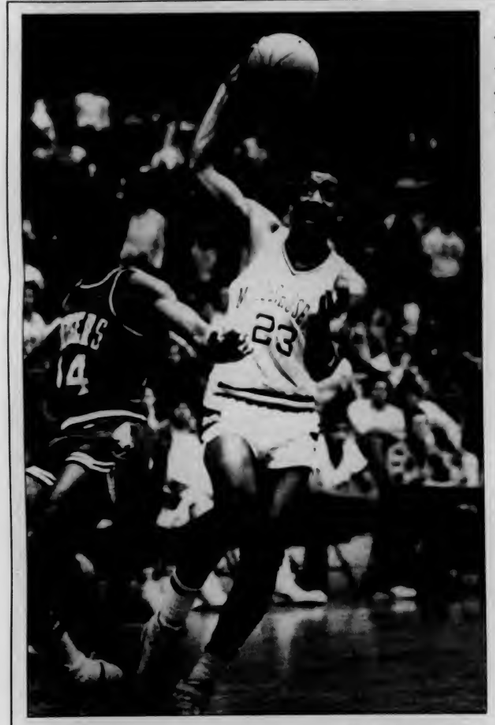
URI, 12-12 overall and 4-10 in the conference, was led by Michele Washington's game high 24 points and Tracey Hathaway's 14 points. Ellen Quantmeyer added 11 points.

"Jerrie just played a terrific game," UM head coach Barbara Stevens said of Bernier's performance. "She played well inside and got some rebounds for us. She played a smart game."

UMass got the best of URI early and led 10-8 with 14:28 remaining in the first half. But the Wrams reeled off a 14-4 run before freshman point guard Christel Zullo drilled a long distance jumper to end the drought, 22-16. URI went into halftime with a 38-31 lead.

The Minutewomen came out smoking in the early stages of the second half and tied the game, 41-41, when Bernier took a pretty feed from Zullo for an easy lay-up. But the Wrams went on another tear, this time to the tune of 8-0, to take a 49-41 lead with 11:54 left in the second half.

But UMass chipped away at the URI advantage and seized the lead, 59-58, on a Wilbor 12-foot jumper with 4:42 to go. The teams exchanged buckets before a Washington lay-up gave the Wrams a 66-63 lead, forcing UMass to call time out.



"We let them get out to eight and ten point leads on us, but we kept coming back," Stevens said. "The kids deserve a lot of credit for the way they came back."

Nancy Hudson scored on a backdoor lay-up, and gave URI a seemingly secure five point lead, 68-63, with 1:38 left. But Wilbor and Bernier buried back-to-back jumpers to draw the Minutewomen to within one, 68-67 with :49 seconds remaining.

An apparantly clean block of a Washington lay-up by Matthews was whistled by the officials, sending Washington to the line with :31 seconds left. She cooly sank both free throws and the Wrams led, 70-67.

The Minutewomen had two more opportunities to score, both of which failed and both of which resulted in UMass fouling Quantmeyer. However, Quantmeyer missed the front ends of both one-and-ones, the latter with :09 seconds remaining in the game. UMass grabbed the rebound and junior guard Mary Marquedant lofted a desperation 20-foot jumper with :04 seconds showing on the clock. Marquedant's jumper glanced off the top half of the backboard right into the waiting hands of Bernier, who banked a soft jumper in the paint and was fouled by URI's Kim West with :01 second to go.

But Bernier was unable to convert the three-point play, as her free throw bounced off the back of the rim to end the game

Freshman forward David Brown hopes to be back from his stomach muscle injury to face West Virginia on Thursday.

UMass basketball notebook

Brown may be back for final two games

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

David Brown, the University of Massachusetts' fine freshman foward, doesn't like the idea of missing basketball games, even one.

Brown missed the first game of his collegiate career on Monday night when badly strained abdominal muscles forced him to the bench as UMass lost to Temple, 58-47 at the Curry Hicks Cage.

"I left it up to Beetle and Liggy (UM head trainer James Laughnane) about his playing against Temple," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "I know he wanted to play and I know we could've used him, he's been one of our most consistent players and our best rebounder."

Brown, who dressed for the game, said that he wanted to play, but it was best he didn't.

"I hate not playing, it doesn't feel right to me," said Beetle. "But this injury has been bothering me for a long time and I really couldn't of played up to my ability. I think I'll be back for the next two games."

Carl Smith, the Minutemen's 5-11 junior co-captain, stands just one assist away from the UMass career record of 518 set by the late Alex Eldridge.

Smith, who already holds the school and conference record for assists in a season with 212, will set the mark in 83 games, it took Eldridge 102 contests.

The Minutemen have had their trouble traditionally with Temple, losing all nine times they have faced the Owls. In those nine games, the Minutemen have lost by an average of 19.8 points with the closest magrin being two, 50-48 last season in the Springfield Civic Center. The 69-38 loss earlier this season was the easiest Temple has won.

Why? "Temple plays a great matchup zone defense," explains Gerlufsen. "I talked to some people who played them in the NCAA's last season and they told me they think it's one of the best in the nation. Plus, their best players are guards and usually, that's what UMass has so they can matchup against us pretty well. It's a goal for the future, beating them."

The Owls are the only Atlantic 10 team UMass hasn't beaten with Temple keeping UMass to an average of 50 points-per-game.

"They have all the players, three quick guards and the big guy (6-9 Tim Perry) in the middle who can block shots," said UM's leading scorer, 6-2 sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton. "If you can get past the guards, then you have to deal with Perry and with the way he can get up, you almost have to throw it high off the glass and hope for the best."

Temple coach Don Chaney, one of the league's class acts, doesn't feel his hold over the Minutemen is forever.

"We may have beaten them in the past, but they'll have their day soon enough," said the TU mentor. "Their young players will mature and they have a good coach. Watch out for UMass."

Playoff Update: UMass is currently at 6-10 in the A-10, in seventh place. They are a game out of sixth, held by George Washington and Duquesne, both at 7-9. Rhode Island is a game behind UMass at 5-11.

The Minutemen play at West Virginia (Thursday) and at Duquesne on Saturday. They need at least a split to make sixth place and with a win over Duquesne, would take sixth place. The top six teams automatically qualify for the conference tourney quarterfinals (on campus sights) set for Feb. 27. The bottom four need to play in first round games on Feb. 25.

Duquesne still must play Rhode Island (home) and UMass. Assuming they can beat URI, the UM-Dukes game looms large. GW has Penn State (away) and St. Bonaventure (away) left. URI has Duquesne away and a game at West Virginia.

Stockbridge takes tourney again

The Stockbridge School of Agriculture basketball team is at it again.

The Aggies swept to their second straight victory in the Robert Crown Invitational Tournament at Hampshire College last weekend, taking the championship with a 63-48 rout of Southern Vermont.

"The kids really wanted this victory, it's been a goal all season," said Stockbridge coach Jack Leaman, the former University of Massachussetts men's varsity mentor.

"We played pretty well throughout the tournament," the coach continued. "It was a very satisfying weekend."

The Aggies, now 8-3 on the season, defeated the host school in the semifinals, 62-51, to advance to the title game.

Freshman Tom Lingenberg led all scorers in the Hampshire contest with 16 points.

"Tom was a force," said Leaman about his 6-3 center. "He was very tough under the boards and scored well."

Freshman Rich Collamore added 13 in the Hampshire game with senior co-captain Mike Luciano contributing nine.

In the championship, Southern was in trouble right away due to the balanced UMass attack.

Lingenberg tossed in 16 again, to lead all scorers. Pat Alberini added a dozen. The Stockbridge bench also contributed

'It is a standstill budget'

Duffey not irate, but disappointed

First of two articles.

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

The budget for higher education recommended to the state Legislature by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, if accepted, will impede some campus improvement projects and temporarily halt efforts to improve academic programs, according to University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey.

Duffey said there are parts of the governor's $19.1 million recommendation that he is "grateful for," but on the whole, the campus did not get all it needed.

Duffey's comments regarding the budget came during a recent inverview in his Whitmore office, during which he discussed campus topics ranging from alcohol to telephone mismanagement.

University officials unveiled a plan last fall requesting a $2.1 million increase in the school's base budget and $18 million for new programs, part of a push to compete with top private institutions in the Northeast within the next five years.

Dukakis has requested that the Legislature increase the University's base budget for fiscal 1987 by $2.5 milion to $148.7 million, an increase of 1.7 percent. Those funds cover basic campus costs such as salaries, utilities, maintenance and some physical improvements.

"We can do some things that need to be done," Duffey said. "We can continue to do some maintainance work, though there are a few major maintainance problems on this campus that cannot wait."

Duffey cited the steam tunnel system repairs adjacent to the Campus Center garage as a case in point. The repairs have blocked the use of the Campus Center Circle since last summer, and traffic has been barred from the area indefinitely. But the governor's budget proposal does not include enough money to complete projects such as that one.

"The steam tunnel has got to be fixed next year, as far as I'm concerned," he said.

A $2.2 million allocation request to the Board of Regents of Higher Education earmarked for UMass library books is money the University welcomes, the chancellor said.

But Dukakis did not request any money from the Legislature to go toward new academic programs. As a result, areas such as biotechnology and chemistry, a major part of the University's initial request filed with the governor last fall, must wait until next year for funds.

"In terms of improvement of academic programs," Duffey said. "It is a standstill budget."

Some UMass officials have said the governor's budget request has delayed the University's five-year plan, but Duffey stopped short of agreeing with that assessment.

"Part of the problem is the continued difficulty of getting a response to the budget that one has a plan and what I think are the unique needs of this campus," he said.

"This is the only major comprehensive research university in the system and we keep being dealt with in the same way community colleges are being dealt with."

Nevertheless, Duffey said his efforts to get the campus what it needs for major maintenance and improved academics will continue with some easy pressure on legislators and business leaders, and a series of trips to eastern Massachusetts to stress the importance of a healthy budget for the campus.

"I'm not going to whimper and cry about this budget," he said, looking out over the swarms of students moving across Haigis Mall as they changed classes. "I'm just going to go on saying this plan is sound, it is needed."

Next: Duffey on alcohol.

Testimony is 'closed' at hearing

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Seven students charged with holding a mass disturbance in the Whitmore Administration Building in December presented their cases yesterday before an administration-appointed hearing board.

Judiciary board chairman Edward P. Mone opened the hearing saying, "This hearing is open by the request of the accused and with the consent of the counsel." But 90 minutes later, the board declared it a closed meeting and ordered a Collegian reporter to stop taking notes.

Confusion ensued, as the students and their counsels said they wanted the meeting open but had misunderstood the chairman's statement. Mone attempted to explain by saying he was simply noting the defendants' right to request an open hearing, but that they had not requested one.

The seven were among 18 students arrested Dec. 5 for holding a sit-in in the Dean of Students Office and the second-floor lobby of Whitmore. The students were protesting the administration's seizure of control of certain student activity funds.

Charmaine Wijeyesinghe of the Office of Student Affairs charged the students with violating the Code of Student Conduct by holding a mass disturbance and failing to obey an order to disperse.

The students accused of violations were Jordan Rosner, Eric Paulson, Deborah McDonald, Joel Rabinowitz, M. Lynne Murphy, Thomas Francoeur, and Joseph Demeo.

According to the Student Code of Conduct, "Following notice by a responsible official of the University, either written or verbal, that a mass disturbance exists, the direction of those is to disperse."

All of the students pleaded innocent to the charges, saying they were never notified that they were involved in a mass disturbance.

"We were not warned of being a mass disturbance. We were warned of being charged with trespassing," Francoeur said in his opening statement.

William F. Field, dean of students, and Director of Public Safety Gerald T. O'Neil each testified that students were adaquately warned they were a mass disturbance and were given time to disperse.

"Trey Williams (an assistant to Madson) and Gerry O'Neil were making anouncements that they (the protesters) would be arrested for occupying the building after it was locked," Field said.

During the sit-in, Williams and O'Neil handed protesters copies of the University Picketing Code and excerpts from the Code of Student Conduct with an arrow pointing to the section on mass disturbances.

Under cross-examination, Field said, "I did not hear anyone say it (the warning), but I believe the sheet covered it."

Francoeur said the handouts were "a description of what is to be done if a mass disturbance happens. It was not an actual warning."

O'Neil said students were given several warnings and the chance to leave, but he admitted, "I don't believe I told students of the mass disturbance. I wasn't aware anyone else did either."

The hearing adjourned without a verdict being reached. Mone said the results would be mailed to the defendants within 10 days.

If found guilty, the students face probation for up to one year.

Mysterious smell invades WMUA

Coke machine to blame for Campus Center's pungent problems

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Nobody knew where the smell came from. It was described as mildew, vomit, bad eggs, sweatsocks, or sewage. Yesterday it invaded the WMUA radio station production room, then spread to other parts of the basement of the Campus Center.

Dudley Bridges, manager of Building Operations, later explained: "A Coca-Cola (machine's) line busted and it ate into another pipe. Gas is leaking from the line."

It is not known what kind of pipes were corroded by the acid in the soda. But the machine, located in the kitchen of the Blue Wall cafeteria — directly above WMUA — sometime Monday began emitting a sticky dark brown liquid that dripped through the ceiling and down the walls. It left a foul-smelling puddle on the station's carpet.

"We smelled it for a while (Monday night) but didn't know what it was," said Paul Blake, public relations coordinator for the radio station.

"Jim Neill (WMUA's program director) was walking in his socks and stepped in it; that's when we noticed it," Blake said.

The odor did not stop the radio station from broadcasting, but the smell seeped into the newsroom, which is adjacent to the production room.

"People who want to make tapes, can't. (A disc jockey) left three hours early last night because of the smell," said Joe Pesaturo, sports director for the station.

"We need about 75 Stick-Ups (air fresheners) in the production room," said Pesaturo.

"We are thinking about bringing a skunk in to ratify the situation," said Neil Grant, a WMUA disc jockey.

The radio station tried to dilute the odor by putting a fan in the production room. But that just blew the smell into the rest of the station.

The only thing that had any positive effect was to spray disinfectant in the room.

"It's a combination of the three worst things you have smelled in your life," Grant said.

Marcos foe killed in California

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — An executive of the Philippine News, a newspaper opposed to the regime of Ferdinand Marcos, was shot to death at home yesterday after receiving a threatening note, authorities said.

Several shots were fired in Oscar Salvatierra's bedroom at his single-story home in the foothills north of downtown Los Angeles, said police Sgt. Randy Tampa said.

Salvatierra's elderly mother, who speaks no English, was in the house about 10 miles north of downtown Los Angeles and called police to report the crime after she heard gunshots, he said.

"From what the mother was saying over the phone, she said shots plural," Tampa said. Police fanned out through the neighboorhood, but no immediate witnesses were found, Tampa said.

Chris Lopez, a spokeswoman for Sen. Alan Cranston, said the senator was notified by the San Francisco headquarters of the Philippine News.

Salvatierra, 41, a naturalized American citizen with four children, had received a written warning Tuesday, said Ben Aniceto, Los Angeles editor for the Philippine News. Salvatierra was Los Angeles bureau manger of the newspaper.

"Philippine News is a disgrace to the Filipino community in the U.S.," Aniceto quoted the note as saying.

"Through your paper your unwarranted accusations and lies have attacked your own countrymen. You should be ashamed to call yourselves Filipinos. So for your crimes, you are sentenced to death by execution."

Cranston, a Democrat seeking a fourth term in the Senate, said in a statement that he had asked FBI director William H. Webster to investigate "this atrocity."

Cranston said he also asked Webster to protect Philippine News publisher Alex Esclamado in San Francisco and the paper's sales representative, Stan Aragon, and member of their families after they received similar threats.

A letter to Aragon said: "You are going to be next," Ms. Lopez said.

"Director Webster assured me he will get right on this matter," Cranston said.

"It would appear that we're going to have an investigative interest in this matter," said FBI spokesman Fred Reaga.

Marcos was opposed by Corazon Aquino in a bitter Feb. 7 election marked by violence and widespread allegations of fraud. The Philippines National Assembly, whose canvass is final, declared last Saturday that Marcos had won, but an independent poll-watchers' group said its count showed Mrs. Aquino the victor.

"What Marcos has done to his country is criminal," Cranston said. "He must not be permitted to export his criminal activities to this country."

Mailman injured by pipe-bomb

WORCESTER (AP) - A package that investigators believe contained a pipe bomb detonated yesterday in a mailman's hands, strewing a law firm with mail and sending the postman to the hospital, officials said.

Postal Inspector Roger Hunt said there were strong indications the device was a pipe bomb, but he would not elaborate. The bomb exploded at 9:56 a.m., just after carrier Edward Mulhearn, 25, entered the lobby of Reardon & Reardon.

Fewer than 10 letters were destroyed. Investigators say they don't know who planted the bomb or whether the package was intended for the law firm.

"There are pieces of shrapnel in the walls and furniture, but no major damage," Hunt said.

Mulhearn was not seriously injured. He was treated at Worcester City Hospital and released.

His brother, Brian Mulhearn, 29, said Edward suffered only bruised ribs and a scratch on the cheek from the explosion. Mulhearn's wife, Mary, said her husband called from the emergency room, saying he'd been in a accident.

Expert says peace movement is ineffective

Nuclear arms expert Ruth Adams said last night that the U.S. peace movement has not been an effective one. She spoke at Amherst College before 70 people.

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

The United States peace movement and intellectual community have not been effective in achieving world peace, the former managing editor of the Chicago-based Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists said last night at Amherst College.

Ruth Adams told about 70 people at the Converse Hall assembly room that the US peace movement fails because it concentrates solely on nuclear arms reduction, to the neglect of domestic problems and a worsening global environment.

Adams said the peace movement has a "fixation" on weapons reduction, which she calls a "negative response" to nuclear arms proliferation. "The peace movement in this country has been so captured by the struggle between the two superpowers that they have found it impossible to form a standpoint independent of the two superpowers," she said.

The superpowers have become "preoccupied" with each other's nuclear arsenals to the degree that they can no longer think of the world in geographical, political and commercial terms, but only in military terms, she said.

The intellectual community in this country must be aware "of all the dimensions in which the human race inhabits the earth, because peace and security can no longer be entrusted to the narrow concepts defined by policy makers over the past 40 years," Adams noted

"The basic biological systems of the world are deteriorating on a global scale," Adams, who's former organization's magazine has a "Doomsday Clock" on its cover as an emblem about the dangers of nuclear war, said. "The human race is consuming its own environment."

In a recent survey of 30,000 dissertations done by doctoral candidates at American universities, only 155 were about nuclear weapons and world security, Adams said, and all of them defined the threat to world peace strictly in military terms.

For peace, racism must be eliminated, there must be an equal distribution of global resources and an end to military dictatorships, along with total dismantling of nuclear weapons, on a global scale, she said.

"I feel pessimistic that this will happen,"Adams said. "But I am encouraged by the recent involvement of women in the peace debate, because women have not been encumbered by the conceptual chaos prevalent in militarists and policy-makers, which have been predominantly men."

"No nation is secure alone. And the only way to insure our common security is to act upon our common humanity."

Greek music lecture set

Music of Greece during the time of ancient Greek writers of tragedies and comedies will be the topic of the third speaker for the 1985-86 Chancellor's Lecture Series at the University of Massachusetts.

Warren D. Anderson, a professor of comparative literature at UMass since 1970, said, "Greek music is essentially lost. We have to reconstruct it from fragments." He will speak tonight at 8 in Memorial Hall.

Anderson's lecture, "Summoning the Spirits: Music-makers of Ancient Greece," will be preceded by a presentation to him of the Chancellor's Medal, the highest honor given to an individual for service to the University.

Anderson founded the University's Translation Center in 1978 and the Five College Seminar on Translation in 1979. He was the chairman of the department of comparative literature from 1971-74. He has written extensively on Greek literature and music and has published several translations, including Aeschylus: Prometheus Bound and Matthew Arnold and the Classical Tradition.

Anderson, an Amherst resident, attnded Harvard University and received a bachelor's degree in Greek and Latin in 1942, a master's in 1947 and a doctorate degree in 1954 in classical philology. He also holds a bachelor's degree from the Honor School of Humanities, Oxford University.

Before college, he was a translator of Japanese codes in the Signal Intelligence Service and served the Army in Australia and the Phillippines.

Man hits pole; booked for DWI

A 24-year-old man was arrested Tuesday at 1:21 p.m. and charged with driving while intoxicated after his car struck a pole on South East Street, Amherst police said.

The accident caused $100 in property damage, police said.

In other police reports:

• A stolen 1979 Ford Mustang was discovered abandoned Tuesday morning in Leverett by the police department there. A stereo and tape deck had been taken from the car, police said.

The car had been stolen from Brandywine Apartments Monday. The owner did not know about the theft until the car was returned.

• A drafting board valued at $350 was reported stolen at 12:08 p.m. Tuesday from room 205 Hills North House. It was taken sometime last weekend. Another drafting board was stolen from the same place 11 days ago, University of Massachusetts police said.

• Two women reported wallets, each containing $30 in cash and other items, stolen at 8:45 Tuesday from the fourth floor of Hills House. Police said they have a description of a suspect.

Budget furor splits Senate

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate passed two motions and one resolution at last night's meeting, but it was a motion that was eventually tabled that caused the most uproar.

A motion calling for the appointment of two senators to the Senate Budget Committee split the senate and caused the motion's original maker, Southwest senator Bill Collins to say,"I never would have proposed the thing if I knew it would have been this much trouble."

Budget Committee Chairman Jordan Rosner said he opposed the appointments of David Martin, a Third-World representive, and Betsy Bower because the budget is in the final stages of being compiled.

"I have the responsiblity to have people trained, and I haven't the time or the patience for that right now," he said

After an one and a-half hours of debate, in which allegations of racism where mentioned by some senators, the motion was tabled until next week.

The Senate managed to approve the transfer of $1,500 from a reserve account to support a lobbying trip to Washington D.C. by Students Advocating Financial Aid.

Another motion approved called for Director of Student Activities Office Randy Donant to accept the Senate's version of a search committee to fill the position of the SAO business manager, which has been vacant since the start of the semester.

Northampton progressives unite

By BARBARA DeLOLLIS
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Since this city has "a wealth of human potential," the founder of a new political consulting firm said he is confident in working toward progressive causes such as stopping US intervention in Central America and reducing the federal defense budget.

Joseph White, a 30-year-old with eight years consulting experience, said he believes there are many people in Northampton interested in social change.

The firm, called the Progressive Group, has a staff of about 20 college graduates and students, including some from UMass.

"All people who are hired have to show a strong commitment to progressive causes," White said.

White said the employees aid with fundraising by making phone calls to the people who have sponsored their clients in the past.

Peggy Shaw, a 21-year-old social thought and political economy major at UMass, has been working for the group for a couple of weeks.

"(White) is really happy with the work we're doing," she said, "He's surprised with the amount of money that we're raising.

"There's always going to be people that are politically on the right that make fund raising a crucial aspect. Because of that, people on the left politically have to do the same thing," Shaw said.

White was previously the director of development of Educators for Social Responsibility for eight years. This organization instructs teachers and parents nationwide on the nuclear issue. He was also involved in Citizens for Participation on Political Action, a fundraising group in Massachusetts.

White said he established the progressive group because he felt there was a need for fundraising for various progressive candidates and groups, and he wanted to use his fundraising skills for good causes.

The Progressive Group is now working for three organizations. One is Ronald V. Dellums, the liberal congressman who represents Berkeley and Oakland, Calif.

White said he chooses his clients according to their politics, which are usually liberal but do range toward the center, Shaw said.

FYI: Speakers flocking to UMass

A discussion titled "Latin American Outlooks on Central America" is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. today in Room 162 of the Campus Center.

Maria Elena Alves, a professor of political science at Amherst College, and Franco D'Intronco, a UMass professor in the department of Spanish and Portuguese, will participate in the discussion, which is sponsored by the Faculty and Staff for Peace in Central America.

David Horner, the senior currency and interest rate analyst for Merrill Lynch Corp. is scheduled to speak on a topic titled "The Overview of Futures and Speculative Trading," at 4 p.m. today in Room 110 of the School of Management.

Sponsored by the Investment/Finance Club, the speech will be followed by a question and answer period, both of which are open to the public.

Services said at 7:45 p.m. yesterday that the problem had been fixed, but that it would take at least another hour for the syrup to stop dripping.

The Undergraduate Student Senate was also affected by the smell, since room 101, which is next to the production room, was unusable. The weekly meeting was moved to the music and reading room opposite the Blue Wall.

Soda from the broken machine also began leaking into the paste-up room of the Collegian, forcing alert graphics workers to move today's pages to safe ground.

Joel Berkowitz told a Campus Center audience last night how Ethiopian Jews were rescued from Sudan by Israel.

Speaker praises Israeli airlift

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

The successful airlift of over 10,000 Ethiopian Jews from the Sudan to Israel last year would have been impossible, had an appreciation for human dignity not been realized by those who aided in the exodus, the vice-chairman of United Jewish Appeal said last night.

While "several thousand" Ethiopian Jews still live in persecution in that country, "It's the first time blacks have been taken out of Africa not in chains, but as free men," said Joel Berkowitz, a 1963 University of Massachusetts graduate and past president of the UMass Hillel.

Speaking to a crowd of about 50 last night on the 10th floor of the Campus Center, Berkowitz praised Israel for taking in the hapless refugees.

"It's an amazing chapter in world history and I don't know if people appreciate it," Berkowitz said. "Here's a small country, beset with many problems - economic, military. But since Israel was a nation of refugees it understood that when the opportunity arose they didn't turn their back on it.

"You don't have to be a historian to know that if you stand up, people can be saved."

In June of last year, Berkowitz spent two weeks in Israel on a fact-finding trip to see how the Ethiopian Jews were adjusting to their new lives in Israel. He was representing the United Jewish Appeal, a fundraising organization that supports rescue and relief programs for Jewish immigrants to Israel and other countries.

The migration to Israel was a long and dangerous trek. The thousands had to escape from their Ethiopian homeland, ruled by a Marxist government that opposes any type of religion and calls Jews, Falasha, which means stranger. Many lives were lost along the way, Berkowitz said.

American officials made a deal with the Sudanese government, which allowed the Jews to be airlifted to Israel, he said.

Absorption centers in several cities are helping to integrate the refugees into an Israeli lifestyle by teaching them Hebrew, training them for jobs, providing health care and helping them build confidence to deal with a new society, Berkowitz explained.

"What other country was willing to take these people into their land?," asked Berkowitz. "The small state of Israel. This wasn't just Band-Aid or Live-Aid, this was human aid."

UNITED TECHNOLOGIES IS LOOKING FOR ANOTHER OHM.

We can't guarantee your name will become a household word if you come to work for United Technologies. Science and technology have come a long way since 1827 and there are few things left to discover as fundamental as Ohm's Law.

Nevertheless, we have plenty to do and can always use another Ohm or two. You have the excellent training we need. Can you bring us some of the creative thinking and rigorous mental discipline of the original?

If so, we'll welcome you into an engineering community numbering 12,000 where you will find resistance to new ideas uncommonly low. You will work on aerospace systems or elevators, on lasers, robotics or heat pumps, or on any of the thousands of projects United Technologies companies have going worldwide.

And this we can guarantee: Like Ohm, you will have opportunities to break new ground.

Interested? Visit your campus placement office. Or write United Technologies, P.O. Box 1379, Hartford, CT 06143.

Man kidnapped by wife

VERSAILLES, Ky. (AP) — An ironworker's wife and two teen-age children have been jailed on criminal charges after he told authorities they tied him to a basement bed for two months, poured cold water on him and turned on a fan in hopes he would catch pneumonia.

James Kimberl, 47, said his family drugged him last Dec.3 and tied him to the bed. He said they fed him once a day, didn't bathe him for seven or eight weeks, occasionally prevented him from using a bedpan and kept him blindfolded most of the time.

He said he escaped Feb 7. On Tuesday, Woodford District Judge J. Craig Bradley sent the case to a grand jury after the children, Kimberly, 19, and James E. Kimberl Jr., 18, testified at a preliminary hearing that they planned to leave their father tied to the bed and move to Florida.

The mother, Shirley, 40, has been charged with kidnapping and attempted murder. The son and daughter are charged with conspiracy to kidnap.

The children said their mother asked them to help hold their father prisoner so she could earn enough money as a motel housekeeper for the move. They denied trying to induce pneumonia.

3 month trial ends

Kater found guilty

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — James M. Kater, whose conviction for the 1978 slaying of a Raynham girl was thrown out by the Massachusetts Supreme Court because key witnesses had been hypnotized, was found guilty Wednesday at his murder retrial.

After listening to three months of testimony and deliberating eight days, the Middlesex County Superior Court jury found Kater guilty of kidnapping and murder in the abduction slaying of 15-year-old Mary Lou Arruda.

When the verdict was announced, Kater put his hand to his head, sank in his chair and repeatedly cried out, "Oh, no, on no. My life is being taken." The victim's mother and family broke into tears as they shouted in jubilation.

"I've never loved 15 strange people in all my life but, boy, I love those people," Joanne Arruda, the victim's mother, said of the jury.

"He Kater did what I wanted. He begged for his life. . .Another child will not have to die by his lousy hand."

I should have known it would happen here. The setting was perfect, the opportunity irresistible. In retrospect, it seems obvious that UMass, the east coast's answer to Berkeley, the flagship university in the public higher education system in the nation's "most liberal state," would eventually be the battleground for the new student rights campaign of aggressive conservative activism.

If they could make it here, they could make it anywhere. Liberal UMass, the latest conquest of the crusading campus conservatives? Such is the stuff of William F. Buckley's fantasies.

It didn't happen all of the sudden.

Conservatives at UMass came out of the closet several years ago. The first sign was the increasing appearance in the Collegian of columns advocating Reagan's nuclear buildup and support for El Salvadoran fascists. Soon thereafter, there emerged a collection of upstart student senators who, with Robert's Rules of Order in hand, began to challenge the progressive domination of the student government.

In the early 80s, however, few progressive activists took the the conservatives' challenge seriously. We had too much faith in the good sense of the UMass student body. We did figure that in a school as big as this there was bound to be a handful of students who actually admired the likes of Ronald Reagan, a man who scarcely more than a decade before had welcomed a "bloodbath" to silence campus dissent. But none of us ever dreamed that one day we'd revisit UMass and be bombarded with the radical right Minuteman newspaper and the news that anti-student conservatives were perilously close to undoing years of hard-fought progress in student rights and empowerment.

But that's what happened. I've heard from friends who had remained in Amherst that things had changed here, that the young conservatives were now a fixture on the Campus Center Concourse. I'd seen a UMass conservative leader on a Boston television talk show. I'd read about the local contingent of "New Campus Rebels" in a recent Boston Globe Magazine article.

Nonetheless, I wasn't prepared for the disappointment I felt last week when I came back to my old school. Instead of feeling proud of UMass like I always have, I left feeling ashamed of some of the things going on here.

Perhaps my pessimism was premature. This is still a great school and a great place to live, and the source of my greatest chagrin, the ultra-conservative fringe, consists of a handful of individuals. The jury is still out as to whether or not these extremists represent anything more significant at UMass than themselves and their corporate benefactors.

One thing is certain. If the UMass student body accepts the sort of racist, sexist, homophobic closemindedness of the type spewed forth by the already infamous Minuteman, this school's improving reputation will suffer. Likewise, if UMass students consent to be used by the right wing in its efforts to reverse nearly three decades of progress in student empowerment by voting to defund SSAM and MassPirg, they'll be forfeiting much of what makes this place so special.

UMass is a special place precisely because people have worked to make it so. Now, more than ever, those of us with a personal stake in its continued success need to carry on that work.

Jackson Katz is a UMass graduate, '82.

SAFA worth it, needed

Roth/Burgess

If one did not know better, one might believe that many federal lawmakers had a grudge against higher education. Each year, about this time of year, many college students see their degrees slipping away, as the federal government attempts once again to balance the budget. Why do students panic? Essentially, because as in years past (only this time it looks even worse) the area which is taking the brunt of federal cuts is our financial aid.

This time, the culprit has been given a nice long name, the Gramm/Rudman/Hollings Deficit Reduction Acts. Overall, the reduction acts call for an approximately 4.7 percent ($11 billion) cut in the deficit for FY'86 and an additional $50 billion cut for FY'87. Similar cuts would continue each year (approx. $36 billion per year) until 1991, when the deficit would be beaten down for good and total a whopping ZERO.

Ridding ourselves of the deficit might be a nice thing indeed, but if we are to cut down as prescribed, Congress must make some decisions about who will be cut and by how much. The most current proposals, though, could mean the end of higher education aspirations for almost one million college students nationwide, and specifically for between 4,000 and 5,000 students who are currently enrolled at UMass, by FY'87. For example, under current proposals, the Pell Grant program would be cut by $350 million; the federal matching money to the State Incentive Grant is slated to be dropped -- from $76 million to zero; Work-study and Supplemental Grant funds would be combined into a Work/Grant program and then cut by over $600 million. These are just a few of the changes in store.

Refinements in the definition of independent status, what methods financial aid offices could use to reach award figures, higher interest rates for loans, and expensive and tedious process regulations on banks still offering Guaranteed Student Loans are a few more specifics -- and the melting pot still is not empty. The "conservative" translation equals $9 to $10 million on this campus alone. Need we really say more -- the issue is serious.

What can you do? Support groups like Students Advocating Financial Aid. They will be lobbying in Washington, March 2-5, with the goal of saving our aid. Encourage your house council and area governement to grant as much money as possible to this organization, so that we can all send this group of dedicated peers to Capitol Hill. Also, take a half hour tonight or just five minutes between classes, and write a letter to your senator or representative. Let them know how you feel and how worried you are. If you need an address to write to, come by our office, or the Senate Office, and we will be glad to look it up for you. Do yourself another favor and make a special call home and encourage your Mom or Dad to write a similar letter. It can only help!

If we still have not convinced you, try one more thing. In your next lecture, look to your left and then to your right, chances are that one of those two students will not be returning next semester or maybe it will be your brother or sister or best friend...Take a moment. Think about it!!

Stacy Roth and Dani Burgess are the SGA co-presidents.

An educational challenge

The following is the conclusion of a statement released today by Chancellor Joseph Duffey and Provost Richard O'Brien concerning Governor Dukakis' budget recommendations for FY87.

What can be done about the state budget request? We plan to talk to members of the Legislature and the public about our needs, and describe in detail our proposals for academic excellence and for redress of the long neglected areas of maintenance and repair on this campus.

We will ask the Legislature to make a restoration of $3.5 million to fund some of the operating budget requests which were denied. This will include $600,000 to begin to implement the new General Education curriculum requirements, as well as $110,800 for Library staffing. We will seek $1.2 million to begin to equip classrooms with computer networks to utilize new equipment in this area. For Chemistry and Biotechnology we will ask for $344,000 to renovate classrooms and laboratories and to improve programs. Other requests, including a special affirmative action opportunity fund, come to $125,000. In addition, we will seek $1.1 million for immediate emergency repairs which should not be delayed until capital funds are available.

We believe we have a sound plan for the future. Those knowledgeable in the field of higher education and those who understand the needs of the next generation have remarked upon the importance of the proposals the campus has presented as a challenge both to ourselves and to the Commonwealth.

We do not intend to stand still as a campus. We will make every effort to move forward in these areas. But our movement depends upon our ability to explain these goals to the citizens of the Commonwealth. Our best hope for the future is the new climate of pride in building a first-class comprehensive research university for the education of the next generation of the leadership of Massachusetts.

Above all, we will continue our careful stewardship of the resources with which we work on this campus, those that come from the taxpayers of Massachusetts, from industry, and from individuals; we will continue to strive for efficiency and high productivity to return value to the taxpayers and to our students in terms of academic quality. We will express, through our plans and our work, our care for the values and concerns which affect the future of the Commonwealth and the nation.

The Collegian welcomes letters, columns, and cartoon submissions. Submissions should be mailed to the Editorial Editor at the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01003, or they can be dropped off at the Collegian classified ad counter in the basement of the Campus Center. Due to the volume of mail received, individual replies cannot be made.

All letters submitted for publication must be signed and include the author's address and telephone number, which will not be published. Letters must be typewritten and double spaced at 67 characters per line. Column submissions should be between 40 and 60 lines. All submissions are subject to edition for clarity and length. — Editor

Letters

Conte unaware, needs our letters

Having just returned from 6 weeks in Nicaragua, I called Rep. Sylvia Conte's office to share my observations with him. I informed him that Pioneer Valley residents came under attack recently when Contra forces entered the town of San Pedro de Lovago where we were building a school. A villager and his 10-year-old daughter were wounded in this raid.

President Reagan is asking Congress for another $100 million to continue this terrorism. I was surprised to hear that Conte is not receiving much support form this district to vote against Contra funding. He is under much pressures from the White House to wage war in Central America. He needs our cards and letters encouraging him to wage peace instead. The vote is this month.

You can write to him c/o U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC., 20515. Or, you can call his Holyoke office.

U.S. faces the choices

Stephen Erickson

The name of the players have changed and it's a different setting, but once again the United States is faced with the problem of how to deal with an intransigent unpopular pro-U.S. dictator, or at least highly corrupt democrat, who rules a country vital to American interests which is fighting a Communist insurgency.

This time it is the Philippines, where trouble is brewing, as an election Ferdinand Marcos hoped would legitimize his regime has had quite the opposite effect. The government's increasingly oppressive tactics, the failure of the election and the continuing disillusionment of the Filipino people can only lead to increased destabilization. In dealing with a government such as that of Marcos', one can only hope that the United States has learned something from past experience.

The case of Somoza's Nicaragua is a good model to study in order to determine the best policy options towards Marcos' Philippines. As resistance to Somoza was growing, one faction in the United States advocated military and economic aid to keep him in power and the Sandinistas out. This strategy was never considered by the Carter administration, whose human rights based foreign policy made it out of the question. There were, however, two other strategies being kicked around the White House.

The first was Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's approach, which was not to support Somoza but not to try and pressure him too much either, because he feared giving off the impression that the United States was trying to overthrow a government. Some State Department officials, however, argued that maximum pressure should be applied to Somoza in order to prevent the polarization of Nicaragua and the ultimate triumph of the Sandinistas, who at early stages enjoyed little popular support. The result was a policy that did not push Somoza hard enough to yield to a democratic and moderate opposition early on, and failed to convince Somoza that, faced with the hard choice of his regime or the Communist-led Sandinistas, the United States would do nothing. The United States should have taken whatever action necessary to see that Somoza stepped down before the Sandinistas gained extensive support. Likewise, we should take such a course of action in our dealings with Marcos.

President Reagan made a grievous error when he stated that both the incumbent Marcos and the opposition leader Aquino were equally guilty of corruption during the Philippine balloting. This simply was not the case. Such a statement could only make Marcos less willing to step down from office, create hostile feelings among the Filipino people towards the United States and fuel the Communist insurgency. Fortunately President Reagan has backed away from his earlier remarks and now seems bent on taking a harder line with Marcos.

There is little support in the Philippines for the Communists just as there was not much support for the Sandinistas in the early stages of Nicaraguas revolution. If the Filippino people find there is no way to remove Marcos peacefully, then the Communists are the ony revolution in town. To forestall this, the United States should begin tightening the screws on Marcos by applying economic and diplomatic pressure. The United States can send funds to the Philippines through unofficial channels in order to bolster the political center. The center must hold in order to prevent the kind of polarization which both Marcos and the Communists feel would serve their own interst.

It is not too late to help the Philippines. U.S. power has limits, but the full extent of that power should be directed towards supporting the large mainstream coalition now forming against Marcos. The promotion of democracy should be the chief U.S. interests, because nothing can serve U.S. strategic interests better than a truly open, democratic and pluralistic society.

Democracy at work?

David Valade

Students for Participating Democracy. This name implies a lofty ideal. A name like this would lead you to believe that this organization dedicates itself toward helping students to increase their participation in our democratic process. But, when looking at the actions of this group, it is best understood as another right wing sham. In fact, their past practices indicate that they are most interested in decreasing students' participation in the democratic process.

To truly participate in democracy, a person needs reliable information without which cannot be made. Throughout their campaign against MassPIRG and SSAM, members of SPD have sought to intentionally mislead us.

Two of the founders of SPD, Brian Darling and Tony Rudy, changed a poster put up by MassPIRG. Their reasoning, according to Darling, was "We were neutralizing their (MassPIRG's) deceptive posters." If they truly believed MassPIRG's posters to be deceptive, then why didn't they seek to enlighten us? Instead they chose to lie, to deceive us into voting for their beliefs under the pretense that we were voting in support of MassPIRG. Such a tactic of deception is more appropriate to totalitarianism. A true advocate of democracy wouldn't stoop to such a despicable tactic.

Their name further claims to be in favor of participation. If this is so, then why did they choose to attack two organizations whose purpose is to increase student participation in the democratic process? Both MassPIRG and SSAM help students to learn effective lobbying techniques. MassPIRG often utilizes initiative petitions. These are done by students, allowing them to participate in a truly democratic process.

SPD states that their real purpose is to stop unfair fees. Perhaps this is the greatest falsity they have uttered to date. Tony Rudy is Co-Editor-in-Chief of the new campus newspaper The Minuteman. Brian Darling is in charge of its distribution. This paper is funded by the Institute for Educational Affairs and the United States Industrial Council's Educational Foundation. Money for foundations such as these comes from right wing individuals and corporations. These are the people who create the toxic waste dumps that MassPIRG seeks to clean-up. They own the factories that pollute our air and give us the acid rain that MassPIRG seeks to diminish.

The real purpose of SPD is to stop the work of groups like MassPIRG by denying them funding. Without money, students will not have the necessary means to lobby and fight for a better environment and future. Corporations, like those who indirectly fund The Minuteman, will be allowed to go on and freely pollute our planet. It seems clear that SPD cannot admit that this is their ultimate goal. It is also clear that silencing groups like MassPIRG has little to do with democracy.

In Friday's Collegian it was reported the SPD will "set their sight on another issue rather than re-challenge MassPIRG and SSAM." In spite of this, rumor has it that SPD can't take 78 percent of those voting on the referendum for MassPIRG and SSAM as adequate response. I've been told that they'll keep asking for referenda such as their latest one. Apparently when democracy fails to do as they wish, they consider harrassment as an alternative. If they can't stop MassPIRG by removing their funding, it seems that they wish to have them spend their time defending themselves, making their other work suffer.

Another rumor says that Rudy and Darling plan to run for Student Government President and Student Trustee. Perhaps they should get a hint from their resounding defeat on the MassPIRG issue and save themselves from further humiliation.

Against weaponry

Alisa Ornstein

"Dear Alisa,

I don't know if this letter will reach you. I still haven't given my legal name. Prison is a trip. I was arrested last Saturday morning while trying to walk into a street in New London to block a schoolbus. The schoolbus carried people to the naval underwater systems center for a celebration of trident Alaska's commisioning (when it is given it's name). I peacefully walked towards the buses praying, and tried to peacefitlly sit in frony of the buses to pray for the passengers. The police swarmed around us dragging us away. I went limp and was carried by three police to a van; where I was piled on top of other prayers."

This letter is from my friend who was one of the 51 people arrested while praying and protesting the existence and build-up of nuclear weapons. The trident is a submarine which carries enough nuclear missles to target over 200 cities. This letter is from one who actively said no to such a weapon.

My friend was part of a group which formed out of a peace walk. In the tradition of Martin Luther King Jr., they took their prayer for peace into action and refused to cooperate with the system that sees their duty to struggle for peace as a crime. The same system proliferates nuclear weapons. Some of the people in the group refused to individually identify themselves and gave their names as Martin Luther King Jr. Because they refuse to cooperate they have been denied certain priviledges and have not been arraigned. Seven remain in jail.

"My health is fine. I am not sick or hurt, and my spirits are high. I have been reading and talking and learning lots. As far as other things go, the prison is smokey (cigarettes), noisey (T.V. and incessant talking) and generally disgusting. The guards are generally okay, although I have systematically been denied priviledges, such as phone calls and library because of my refusal to name myself. What the judge is trying to do is not going to break my will; quite the opposite, he is forging my will. I am getting a first hand lesson on the injustices of the judicial system.

We all are strong and together. We draw from each other strength and hope. In this well of despairing men we are maintaining hope and love. I feel your support, your love, it gives me strength. We all have written letters to the judge voicing our awareness of the illegality of his actions. We do not feel forgotten – we have been empowered by the efforts against us.

Don't fear for me Alisa, fear for the poor beings who try to hold me prisoner. They foolishly believe I am imprisoned here, how wrong they are. My spirit soars, my heart leaps, my being is enveloped in warm laughter. I feel not the laughter of contempt in spite, but the laughter of love. The feeling is one of wholeness; both embracing and embraced. Around me are the faces of despair, fear, anger, resentment; seeing these faces reveals the face of our nation. By refusing to feel those negativities towards our brothers/sisters maybe we can help facilitate their healing and the healing of societies that spawn them. I know I'm writing in circles, but that is exactly my point, all is connected. No causes and effects on a direct linear scale, but all happenings are almost electrically connected.

I've been talking with lots of people here; prisoners and guards. Raising questions in peoples minds is so important. We seem to be making a stir here. Prisoners are not at all frightening; very diverse bunch. So much wasted human potential here. Violence is pumped in through T.V., newspapers, guard pressure and pressure from other inmates. We are seen as an aberration and I think respected for our non-violence. They see in us not vulnerability, but passivity. There is strength in our calmness.

Try to spread word among people what is happening. People must not ignore the crazyness that surrounds us.

Love, Martin Luther King Jr. (John Doe #5)

SUMMONING THE SPIRITS: MUSIC-MAKERS OF ANCIENT GREECE

Greek music is a notorious mystery. How were lyres and reed pipes played? What can modern instruments tell us about them? How did the Greeks regard music and musicians? Can we understand their poetry without its music and dance? Musical examples and parallels with non-Western music will be included.

"The Trip is Worth the Walk"

ARTS

live wire

By TOM MIDDELETON
Collegian Staff

There really isn't that much happening this weekend, not a lot of bands around. However, tickets for some decent upcoming acts are selling and you may want to grab some.

Tonight at the Hatch, Free Press will open for Circle at 9:00 p.m. Circle has been playing around the area for three years and has played all over campus. Free Press is pretty new to the UMass scene. Watch for their washboard player. Both bands do origional tunes which is always refreshing.

The Michael Gregory Band is playing the Red Balloon at 9:30 tonight. My friends tell me this band is good though I've never seen them. The word is...good dance music without synthesizer flash. Only two things might stop you from making this show: You must be 21 and the Red Balloon is in Easthampton.

Johnny Winter and Roy Buchanan will get down Tuesday night in the Student Union Ballroom. Both play real mean electric blues and have been working for some time to earn their reputations. If you like good guitar this is a great combination. Although Winter has a larger name, I prefer Buchanan because of his great technique. So if you have $9 to spend on the blues, grab some tickets and go see the show.

Sunday night, bluesman Dave Van Ronk will play the Iron Horse. Ronk does have a reputation as a good blues guitarist and if you are lucky you'll catch his covers of Joni Mitchell tunes.

Tickets for The Alarm with The Bongos sell tommorow at the FAC Box Office and Datatix. Also, only $6 tickets for The Damned at Pearl Street Thursday night. This show will be open to anyone 18 or over.

Johnny Winter, and opener Roy Buchanan, will be performing at 8 p.m. on Feb. 25 in the S.U.B. Tickets are on sale now.

David Murray and cohorts play great jazz

David Murray Big Band
Live at Sweet Basil - Vol. 1
Black Saint Records

By GLENN SIEGEL
Collegian Correspondent

With each stylistic lurch in jazz, younger players have rejected the restraints of the dominant aesthetic and broadened the norm of acceptable sounds. In the 1960s, this effort was spearheaded by Messrs. Coleman, Coltrane and Taylor, who questioned the premise that music needed bar lines, established keys and chord changes in order to communicate.

It was in this "free jazz' environment (reflecting a corresponding freedom in the social scheme), that saxophonist David Murray and his musical cohorts sharpened their chops. Listening now to Murray blow on such early efforts as Low Class Conspiracy and Live at the Lower Manhattan Ocean Club, one hears a muscular player with plenty of technique, engaged in some of the excesses of the time.

Since then, the pendulum has swung in a more conservative direction (again mirroring a change in the national mood?). The result has been dubbed "neoclassicism" by pundits, and it is characterized by a reemphasis on compositional form as well as an updating of earlier styles.

David Murray is in the thick of this development, as his latest big band effort, Live at Sweet Basil - Vol. 1, illustrates. Assembled at the New York nightspot are 11 of the most gifted, young improvisors working today. Althoughg plenty of solo space is provided, the group's energy is neatly molded by Murray's compositions and arrangements.

David Murray and his sax

The most obvious example of this neoclassicism is Murray's tip of the hat to the great New Orleans clarinetist and soprano saxophonist, Sidney Bechet. The 12-minute romp titled "Bechet's Bounce," evokes the spirit of early jazz without resorting to mimicry. This is no repertory band, but a group of like-minded modernists finding new avenues to explore within the context of an established style. The clarinet solo by John Purcell, the trombone work of Craig Harris and the trumpet effort of Olu Dara, all swing with a loose-limbed suppleness that unleashes the music's unbridled optimism.

"Lovers" is a sumptuous ballad given a lush arrangement by the leader. Murray has always had a generous romantic streak in his playing, but here, as on the title composition of his 1980 Black Saint LP, "Ming," his fat, Hawkins-inspired tone really shines.

Everybody has a hand in "Duet for Big Band," which takes up most of the second side. I've listened to this piece a dozen times and I'm still discovering little gems embedded in the performances.

At age 30, Reedman, composer and bandleader David Murray already has an impressive resume. With this outstanding big band session committed to disc, he has added another jewel to his crown.

Former basketball player in hospital

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Mark Haymore, a University of Massachusetts varsity basketball player during the 1978-79 seasons, is resting comfortably at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton after nearly dying of heart failure on Sunday afternoon after playing basketball in Boyden Gym.

Former UMass teamate Donald Byrd and his coach, Jack Leaman, told the Collegian yesterday that Haymore was playing ball in Boyden, returned to Thoreau Dormitory to visit friends and then started complaining of chest pains.

He was taken to the UMass Health Center before being rushed to Cooley-Dickinson. On the way, his heart stopped and was re-started by paramedics.

"Mark is doing well now," reported Leaman, who coached UMass from 1966-79. "It was quite a scare for him, but he got through it."

Haymore played in 1978 with Alex Eldridge, the great Minuteman guard who died after suffering a heart attack a few years later

Haymore was taking classes at UMass with an eye towards finishing up his Fine Arts degree. Byrd said he was also looking ahead to graduate school. Haymore had been playing professional basketball in Bolivia before returning to Amherst, where he lived in Riverglade Apartments.

"He was short of breath and sweating pretty badly after two games," said Byrd, the head of residence in Thoreau. "So we came back to the dorm to take a rest. He started saying his chest hurt, so we got him over to the Health Center, then they rushed him to Northampton. Thank God he got out of it OK."

Haymore led the Minutemen in scoring in 1979, averaging 17.1 points, the most by a UM player up until Lorenzo Sutton's 17.6 average this season.

He also led UMass in rebounding for the 78 and 79 seasons, with 7.0 and 10.0 boards a game. He also holds the school record for best field goal percentage in a season with a .625 mark in 1977-78. His career shooting percentage of .551 is second on the UMass record books to former NBA player Al Skinner.

attempts, UMass missed on eight-of-19 field goal tries.

The losses to Richmond (by five), Rhode Island (by four), and Delaware (by three) might have been avoided if the Minutemen had a kicker they could count on to hit for three points. Some victories were also unneccesarily close because of missed field goals.

Mitchell hit on all of his points-after his senior year and missed only four (due mainly to bad snaps) in his career. he set a school record with a 43-yard field goal and hit several in the 35-40 yard range. He also booted 50-yarders in practice.

Mitchell's chief competition for the kicking job willbe current freshman Silvio Bonvini, who hit 19-of-19 PAT's and four-of-11 field goals. Bonvini lost his job in midseason to offensive guard Stan Kaczorowski, who booted five points after and four field goals, but would rather concentrate on his linemen's duties.

Kickoffs were handled by walk-on Rolf Wendt all season. Head coach Jim Reid said yesterday that the placekicking job will be "wide open," before the season with anybody able to help being given a shot.

Mitchell is also a good punter with an over 40-yard average in high school, but the 1986 punting duties are in the hands of All-American Dimitri Yavis, who was all-conference with a 39.5 yard average. He replaced former starter Jim Tandler, who was lost for the season with a knee injury. Tandler averaged 38.4 in his only game and 36 yards his freshman season.

"The punting's all set anyway," said Reid. "I know that's one problem I won't have in September. We have plenty of great punters."

Former UMass head coach Bob Stull and former UMass assistants Kevin Faulkner and Steve Telander were in town on Tuesday and met with Reid.

The trio, who all bolted UMass for Texas-El Paso in January, reported that recruiting went well and that they are ready to start rebuilding El Paso's tattered program.

Reid also said he is close to finalizing his staff of assistant coaches.

Having to replace Faulkner, Telander and himself as assistants, Reid will lost likely name Frank Novak as an offensive coach by the end of the month. Several current assistants will also be given new titles within the staff to fill holes left by the departed coaches.

Hoop teams at West Virginia

•Men seek 6th place

By PETER ABRAHAM

Do or die, now or nothing, there's no tomorrow. Name your cliche for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team and their current road trip.

For if the Minutemen don't at least split their final two games of the regular season, their position in the Atlantic 10 Conference playoffs will be an unstable one.

The Minutemen are 6-10 in the league, good enough for seventh place. They are a game out of fifth place, held by both George Washington and Duquesne at 7-9. Rhode Island is right behind UMass at 5-11.

The winner of the Atlantic 10 playoffs gets an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament. UMass has proven they can play with any team in the Atlantic 10, with the exception of first place St. Joseph's, who blew the Minutemen out twice, once by 34 points.

But if the Minutemen finish in seventh, they will be forced to play last-place Rutgers for the right to face St. Joe's in the quarterfinals, in Philadelphia.

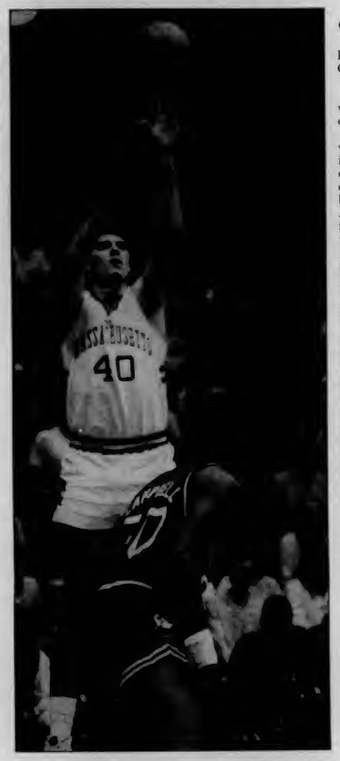
A sixth place finish would pit UMass against the third place team in the league, either Temple of West Virginia, again at the higher seed's gym.

With the way UMass has played this season, no scenario looks all that wonderful, but the Minutemen and coach Ron Gerlufsen would like nothing more than to avoid another meeting with the Hawks.

"This trip is our most important of the season, without a doubt," said sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton. "We have to win at least one, but we think we can win both (the Minutemen play at Duquesne on Saturday)."

West Virginia is 13-3 in the league, 18-10 overall and losers of two straight league games, a rarity for coach Gale Catlett and his Mountaineers.

WVU needs two victories to finish the regular season with 20 wins, a feat they have accomplished the last five seasons. But despite the obvious goals, Catlett isn't taking anything for granted.



"I think (UMass coach) Ron Gerlufsen has done a fine job with a young team," the coach said. "I think people will be surprised when they see what an athletic team he brings in to our place on Thursday night. They can be very tough to face. UMass isn't an automatic win, far from it, they'll push us hard."

The Mountaineers beat UMass, 69-61 at the Curry Hicks Cage back on Jan. 25. Dale Blaney, WVU's all-conference guard, led the vistors with 18 points. For UMass, Sutton had 17.

"We'll need to stay within ourselves and not let them dictate the tempo," said Gerlufsen. "West Virginia is a tough team with a lot of talent, but I think we are getting better every week and we are certainly capable of beating them."

Minuteman Mutterings: David Brown, UMass' freshman foward that missed his first game on Monday night against Temple, is making the trip and could play. Brown has pulled stomach muscles and didn't practice yesterday or the day before. . .UMass is 3-16 against the Mountaineers. . .junior co-captain Carl Smith needs one assists to tie the career UMass record of 518. With 180 this season, Smith has an outside chance of being the first UMass player to have two 200 assist seasons in his career. He set a school and conference record with 212 in his freshman season.

The Minutemen are traveling with the UMass women's team, who play the Mountaineers at 5 p.m. and also play the same day at Duquesne. . .Sutton has scored in double figures all but one game this season, including 17 straight contests.

•Women need a win

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

How important was the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team's 70-69 loss to the University of Rhode Island on Tuesday night?

Had UMass won Tuesday's game, the Minutewomen would have avoided playing an extra game in the upcoming Atlantic 10 tournament. By losing to URI, UMass dimmed their hopes of possibly finishing seventh in the conference standings and avoiding a possible playoff game between the number eight and number nine teams in the A-10. The Minutewomen (9-15 overall and 2-11 in the conference) are currently occupying the number eight spot in the conference.

The Minutewomen have three games remaining on their regular season schedule, including tonight's conference match-up against 6-foot-7 Georgeann Wells and West Virginia University. UMass will face Duquesne in Pittsburgh on Saturday and return to the Cage for the home finale against George Washington University on Monday.

In a nutshell, UMass must win tonight's game at West Virginia. If the Minutewomen lose, they will have to face either Duquesne or URI in a playoff game that will determine who inherits the unenviable task of facing eighth-ranked Rutgers University (23-2 overall and 14-0 in the conference) in the tourney quarterfinals.

UMass was a 67-61 loser to the Mountaineers (10-14 overall and 7-6 in the conference) when the two teams last met at the Springfield Civic Center on Jan. 11. Sophomore center Susan Burfoft, still on the injury list with a broken finger, led the Minutewomen with 20 points and 13 rebounds. Wells paced West Virginia with 20 points and 15 rebounds.

West Virginia's height along the front line will prove to be a large problem for the Minutewomen. The absense of Burtoft will be noticed, as she physically controlled the wiry Wells from start to finish in their last meeting. The Mountaineers are suspect around the perimeter, and if UMass can successfully exploit this WVU weakness and contain Wells, all should go well.

Minutewoman Mischief -Senior guard Barbara Hebel was named a first-team university division academic All-American by the College Sports Information Directors of America (COSIDA). . .Freshman point guard Christel Zullo dished out 15 assists against Temple University last Friday night, setting a new school record. She now has 118 assists on the season. With three games left in the season, she could break the season assist record of 149 held by Mary Hallaren (1978-79). . .Senior captain Jerrie Bernier's 22 point performance against URI moved her into seventh place on the career scoring list with 707 career points. . .Senior forward Karen Damminger moved into fifth place on the all-time UM rebound list, collecting her 469th career rebound against URI. . .The injury update is looking a little brighter for the Minutewomen. Burtoft, sophomore forward Tara Lewis and senior forward Kelly Collins are still out of the lineup, although Collins did dress for the URI game. Both Burtoft and Collins could be healthy for the A-10 tournament. . .Freshman forward Beth Wilbor leads in field goal percentage, shooting 58 percent from the floor.

Ski teams take Amherst meet

By KARA MULLEN

CHARLEMONT — Once agin, the University of Massachusetts ski teams came home with first place in a tournament as well as in the conference, this time taking the honors in the Amherst Invitationals at Berkshire East.

Both teams have held first place throughout the season since the first January meet, also at Berkshire East.

In the slalom race on Saturday, the women took first place, beating rival Boston College and Plymouth State.

The top three times scored with Alice Gigliotti taking second, Kathy Smiley grabbing fourth and Lisa Luczkow grabbing eighth. The race was won by UMass freshman Diana Bessighieni, but her time did not count due to her entering the race as UMass' sixth skiier. The times for the first five members of a team are the only ones to score.

In the men's race, UM was second to Plymouth State, yet still retained first place in the standings. Marc Dennis was fourth for UMass with Craig McCordic and Bill Davidson going 5-6.

On Sunday, the giant slalom saw the UM men take third as Chris Brigham won individual honors. That loss aside, UMass retained their hold on first place.

In the second giant slalom race of the day, the UMass men won, led by McCordic in first place. Brighman was second.

In the women competition, UMass won easily again as Gigliotti was second place overall followed by Sandy Stripp in third and Smiley in fourth

In the league, the UMass men currently have 65 points with BC second, having 57 points. The women's rankings see UMass having a commanding lead with 59 points to the Eagles' 47.

Due to the teams being so highly ranked, they have been invited to the Eastern Division Championships at the Middlebury College Snow Bowl this weekend.

"We ski the strongest teams in the nation, Vermont being far better than everybody else," said Forestry professor William MacConnell, the UM coach over the past 20 years. "If we ski really well, we finish eighth out of 12."

The coach, who has seen the men win the league for 17 straight seasons and the women, 12, also said that he was pleasantly surprised by the outstanding efforts by the newer people on the team.

MacConnell named Kathy Smiley, Sandy Stripp, Alice Gigliotti, and captain Colleen Sweeney, as outstanding women for the season as well as Cindy Johnson who sustained a knee injury which kept her out for most of the season. Johnson had won the first race. MacConell named Craig McCordic, Bill Davidson, Marc Denis, and Chris Brigham as "truly outstanding" for the men this year.

Minutemen recruit Jersey placekicker

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team has moved to fill its last need for the 1986 season, a kicker.

Head coach Jim Reid said yesterday that David Mitchell is the last recruit to join the Minutemen and will compete for the placekciking job next season.

A 6-0, 185 pounder from Cherry Hill East High in Cherry Hill, New Jersey, Mitchell was recruited by Temple, Colgate and Delaware before deciding on UMass.

"He's a great athlete who can also play fullback," said assistant coach Mike Dunbar, who recruited Mitchell. "He's a solid kicker who adds good depth at fullback. He's fast and strong, I'm looking foward to seeing him this summer."

The Minutemen had problems with their kicking game last season. Although they were 24-of-25 in points after

Bars forced to check IDs more carefully

By CAROLYN PHILLIPS
Collegian Correspondent

Harder-to-get liability insurance and stricter enforcement of liquor laws have forced Amherst bars and package stores to be increasingly careful about selling alcohol, even to those obviously of legal drinking age.

"It all depends on reputation," said Bill Russell, the manager of Russell's Liquors on Main Street. "We even card people whose faces are familiar and who we know are of age, just to cover," he said.

The Top of the Campus Lounge at the University of Massachusetts has a book by the door, where all out-of-state customers must sign their names, social security numbers and addresses.

The lounge has increased the number of bouncers, and "all beverage people have to attend alcohol awareness and training programs," said Randy Krutzler, the beverage supervisor at the T.O.C.

"We have to take every precaution," Krutzler said.

His fear was echoed by most Amherst bar managers.

"It's a real dangerous thing. It [alcohol liability insurance] is all run by a group of investors, and they send inspectors around," said Mike Fusia, the manager of Time Out, a bar on North Pleasant Street.

Dan Carlson, manager at Barselotti's, said, "We have to crack down, because they crack down on us. They send people undercover so we have to card everybody. We could get sued for everything."

Barselotti's has also increased its staff of bouncers and keeps a book to record out-of-state licenses. Its employees and those at Time Out and Delano's must attend alcohol workshops and are trained to determine when a person is intoxicated.

"It's hard, though. If a police officer can't tell if a person is drunk, how are we supposed to tell?," Krutzler said.

Not only the managers have to worry; bartenders and bouncers are also responsible.

"The most commmon thing is people lending their ID's to other people. We confiscate them and bring them to the police. If we don't, it's a thousand bucks [fine], and I don't have a thousand bucks," said Steve Jenar, a bartender at Time Out.

The police will confiscate the license of the lender and refer the lender to the Registry of Motor Vehicles for action, possibly revocation of the license, according to Robert Joyce, UMass police chief.

The person who borrows the license could be charged with falsely representing oneself, a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of up to $200, Joyce said.

If the lender claims the license was lost, he or she is still not cleared and can be punished by the registry, possibly

'I enjoy drinking,' but...

Decries alcohol abuse; denies telephone abuse

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

When University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey was asked by a WMUA staff member if he would record a set of spots urging the community and students not to drink and drive, he did not hesitate before accepting.

So, in early September, armed with enough copy to fill three five-second breaks written by Paul Blake, the station's public relation's coordinator, Duffey pulled the mike to his mouth and in a paternal tone, out came his plea:

"My friends down here at WMUA and I want to make sure that if you and your friends will be drinking tonight please don't drive. I've got enough to worry about."

The three spots, all variations on the same drinking theme, were something different for both Duffey and the station, but the chancellor firmly believed in the message.

"We are all trying to make a point that you can enjoy a football game without getting bombed out of your mind," he said during an interview earlier this month. "The whole community is hurt by some of the things that were going on at football games a couple of years ago."

Alcohol and the issue of bars and serving on campus has been a touchy topic since the University lost its liquor liability insurance last summer, turning drinking establishments on campus dark and dry for the entire fall semester.

Since then, the bars have gone wet again, after the state Legislature established an insurance pool to help bars having difficulty obtaining liability insurance.

The new policy, believed to cost about $30,000 annually, is not something administrators have been willing to discuss openly, and Duffey is no exception.

When asked specifics about the liquor situation at UMass, Duffey shed little light on the insurance situation, but he did discuss the broad issue of alcohol use and abuse.

"It's not the biggest issue on the campus," he said. "I just know what I read in the papers.

"I enjoy drinking. I also have had friends who abuse alcohol. I suppose there are a few times in my life I abused alcohol. It is something we are all becoming aware of as a social problem."

Another problem Duffey addressed during the hour-long interview conducted in his office on the third floor of Whitmore Administration Building was the controversy surrounding alleged long-distance phone abuse that surfaced last fall.

In November, after the Boston Herald ran stories concerning high University phone bills, the House Post Audit and Oversight Committee investigated. Duffey traveled to Boston to defend the Amherst campus.

"The main issue between the committee and me," Duffey said, "was whether our faculty should be permitted to make long-distance telephone calls, and on a campus like this, the faculty has to make long-distance phone calls."

UMass' telecommuncations bill last year totalled $750,000, Duffey said, comparable to other state institutions such as Rutgers University in New Jersey and Penn State.

"The real problem again is that the committee never confronted an institution like this before," Duffey said, referring to similar problems he is having getting an adequate budget for the University. "I mean, they were comparing our institution to the state colleges or even the regional universities and that is a very different game."

Activist in Amherst for book reception

Virginia Foster Durr, a friend of Rosa Parks, who bailed Parks out of jail the night she was arrested to start the Civil Rights Movement, will attend a reception celebrating the publication of her recent autobiography from 3 to 5 p.m. tomorrow at the Jones Library in Amherst.

The 82 year-old Durr will appear in the library's gallery for an informal book-signing for her recent work titled "Outside the Magic Circle, The Autobiography of Virginia Foster Durr."

Born an aristocrat in Alabama, Durr and her husband worked with Eleanor Roosevelt to abolish the poll tax and later befriended Parks in the mid-1950s.

In 1954, when US Senator James O. Eastland hauled Durr up before his Internal Security Subcommittee, she stood mute before the panel accusing her, and said: "I stand in utter contempt of this committee," as she proceeded to powder her nose.

Her book was well received by the New York Times Book Review in December, and well-known author Studs Terkel wrote in the book's foreward, "...she could be the rebel. She could step outside the magic circle, abandon privilege, and challenge this way of life. Ostracism, bruises of all sorts, and defamation would be her lot. Her reward would be a truly examined life. And a world she would otherwise never have known."

Durr is scheduled to meet with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis today to receive an award at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University. The Amherst reception is sponsored by the UMass department of history and the Goliard Bookshop, which will provide copies of her book for sale.

Iranian plane carrying diplomats shot down

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) -- An Iranian passenger plane on a domestic flight was shot down by an Iraqi fighter jet yesterday, and a personal representative of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini was among the 40 people believed killed, Iran's official news agancy reported.

The Islamic Republic News Agency said several members of the Majlis, Iran's parliament, were on the plane. It said Iraqi rulers "added a new page to the criminal file...of violating international conventions" with the attack.

Iraq denied the Iranian report, saying its attacks were confined to military targets.

Both sides yesterday reported shooting down military aircraft, but these could not be confirmed by independent observers. Iran and Iraq also gave conflicting accounts of ground battles in southern Iraq, where Iran launched an offensive Feb. 9. The two countries have been at war since September 1980.

The official Iraqi news agancy, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, said its jets downed one Iranian F-4 and a military C-130 transport plane early yesterday, raising to 14 the number of Iranian aircraft Iraq claims it shot down in the past 11 days.

IRMA reported Iran's ground defenses shot down two Iraqi aircraft, and state-run Tehran radio later said two Iraqi helicopters were also downed, bringing to 47 the number of aircraft that Iran claims to have downed in the latest round of fighting.

Iraq claimed its ground forces advanced "considerable distances" toward the Iranian-occupied port of Faw in southern Iraq on the Persian Gulf Coast. But Iran said its troops suppressed the assault.

Iraq also said its warplanes flew a total of 715 sorties during the day and dropped "tons of bombs" on Iranian troop concentrations.

Creative alibis for tardiness

NEW YORK (AP) -- Most workers explain their tardiness or absence with prosaic tales of dead batteries, missed trains or common colds.

But from a creative minority come explanations such as, "I thought Halloween was a holiday" or "someone stole one of my shoes on the bus."

One hundred executives at the nations's 1,000 largest companies were asked in a survey to describe some of the more unusual alibis they have heard.

"We're not talking about standard reasons," said Robert Half, whose employment company commisssioned the survey.

Some examples:

* "Suddenly, the doors of the armored car in front of me opened up, and $10 bills started flying out," causing a traffic jam.

* "I was having breakfast at a coffee shop when I fell asleep at a table. The waitress didn't wake me up until 9:30 a.m."

* Some stooped to blaming dumb animals "My parakeet spoke for the first time, so I waited for him to do it again so I could record it," including man's best friend: "The dog got hold of my toupee and hid it somewhere in the basement."

James Thomas of Burke Marketing Inc. of Cincinnati, which did the survey, could not answer the most obvious questions raised by the excuses -- Did anyone believe them?

His excuse: "It wasn't on the questionnaire."

But Half said most bosses aren't stupid, and he offered some advice to the tardy and truant: "Sometimes, of a weird thing really did happen, you're better off not saying anything."

BURNING MAD- Protestors burn shirts, calendars and campaign materials of Philippine president Ferdinand E. Marcos in a demonstration yesterday to protest Marcos's being declared winner in the Feb. 7 election.

Reagan now blames Marcos for most fraud

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The Philippines is the latest case in point: Ronald Reagan can change his mind.

While awaiting a report from special US envoy Philip Habib, the president already has shifted his analysis of the election in Manila.

After telling the nation Feb. 11 that fraud and violence may have occurred "on both sides," Reagan directly blamed the party of President Ferdinand Marcos five days later for most of the irregularities.

When Habib returns next week, the shift could pick up speed. US aid could be reduced, Ambassador Stephen Bosworth recalled or Marcos urged to arrange his own succession or to share power with the opposition.

"We have a stake in freedom, we have a stake in democracy," Secretary of State George Schultz told the Senate Budget Committee on Wednesday. "Let's put that first, even above the bases."

He referred to Clark Air Base and Subic Bay, the main forward point for the US Navy's Pacific fleet.

The embattled Marcos had drawn a rare bit of strength from Reagan's initial even-handed remarks. Marcos' opponents were said to be dispirited by the suggestion of fraud in challenger Corazon Aquino's camp.

Reagan's reversal added to Marcos' mounting woes. His opponents drew encouragement in their effort to drive him from office.

White House aides said the president had been getting more information all the time. But that may not explain the shift in emphasis. With Reagan, who has a long history of pragmatism despite a deep-seated conservative philosophy, it's often hard to tell.

He may have changed his mind about Marcos and the way the election was conducted. He may have been persuaded by the stream of moderate-to-conservative Republicans on Capitol Hill who are lining up against Marcos and would hold up US aid to the Philippines.

Allies of Marcos meet with Aquino

MANILA, Philippines (AP) -- Some traditional allies of President Ferdinand Marcos appeared to distance themselves from his government yesterday, as European countries considered boycotting his inauguration and several ambassadors met with Corazon Aquino.

Mrs. Aquino, Marcos' opponent in the disputed Feb. 7 election, met ambassadors from 14 European countries and Japan. She told them she was determined to assume the presidency of the Philippines at the "earliest possible time."

None of the ambassadors specifically endorsed Mrs. Aquino's claim that she won its election but was cheated out of victory. She had asked them not to recognize Marcos' government.

The election has been widely criticized here and abroad as fraudulent.

Ambassador Wieger Hellema of The Netherlands, acting as spokesman for nine European Common Market nations' envoys, was asked about reported plans for ambassadors from the trade bloc not to attend the Marcos inauguration. "That is under consideration in the capitals" because of the fraud allegations, he said.

Asked if any of the countries were considering withdrawing recognition of Marcos' government, he said there had been "no word on that."

In Strasbourg, France, the European Parliament voted unanimously yesterday to blame Marcos for most of the reported abuses in the special election, called by Marcos in an effort to improve his popularity.

Early Greeks improvised music

by JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Staff

Comparative literature professor Warren D. Anderson explained the simplicity of ancient Greek methods and instruments that produced complicated sounds rarely heard in the modern era, in a lecture last night titled, "Summoning the Spirits: Music Makers of Ancient Greece."

Speaking before a crowd of 85 at Memorial Hall, Anderson explained the various methods and techniques of scales, pitches and melodies used by Greek musicians. His lecture mainly revolved around the origins and sounds emitted by the lyre, a string instrument, and the aulos, a wind-pipe instrument.

"They were the instruments that dominated Greek music," he said.

He briefly discussed other Greek instruments, including the kithara, the forefather of the modern guitar.

"The next time you see a rock guitarist attacking his instrument, look at its shape while it still has any," he said, jokingly.

Anderson was the third guest in the Chancellor's Lecture Series. After his speech he was awarded the Chancellor's medal, the highest honor given to an individual for service to the University.

He said the origin of Greek music began around the time of Homer and his two epic poems, "The Illiad" and "The Odyssey."

"Originally, epic poetry was sung or rhythmatically intoned," he said.

Greek music became noticeable near 200 B.C., he said.

"A definable Greek presence can be traced in the central Aegean area," Anderson said, "but some of the myths reach farther back, towards the Shaman painted on a cave wall more than 10,000 years ago.

"A minotaur figure, part man part bison, he menaces sexually an equally ambiguous bison-reindeer doe, frightened and aroused, fleeing before him. The details are unmistakable. His mouth acts as a resonator for a musical bow," he said.

Anderson said early Greek music has to admired.

"Throughout the period of their greatest achievements in literature, art and architecture they continued to use a range of musical instruments and techniques narrower than what is available to many African tribes (today). How can we account for this?

"The only satisfactory answer is that they kept music simple by choice. If the Greeks chose to adopt and maintain an uncomplicated system, their sense of priority deserves respect," he said.

Man interrupts woman in shower

A woman reported that while she was taking a shower, a 35-year-old man rustled the curtain and ran away, at 1 p.m. Wednesday in Crampton House. The man had been seen earlier in the corridors, University of Massachusetts police said.

It was suggested that the building's security reinstate a 24-hour security policy which they had recently discontinued, police said.

In other police reports:

Student upgrades R.A. training

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

Through her work as a resident assistant, summer orientation counselor, and head of the new promotional campaign to recruit R.A.'s, Jodi Green is doing her share of extra-curricular activities at the University.

"I try to do something different every semester," Green said.

Green became a teacher's assistant for the R.A. class after taking the course for two semesters. She felt that there was more for R.A.'s to know about social issues, and implemented a course for advanced R.A.'s during her fourth semester.

Last fall she moved from Southwest to Northeast to avoid "R.A. burnout," she said.

"I didn't feel like I was working up to par. It was nothing anyone else noticed -- my (Resident Director) thought I was still doing a good job -- I noticed it in myself," she said. "So I made the move to Northeast. It made me a new R.A."

This past semester Green undertook a new campaign to increase the declining number of applications for R.A. positions. "The more people having the chance to take the opportunity the better," she said.

Before working on the campaign Green had worked on different projects for housing services. Last fall someone mentioned the idea of the campaign, and she volunteered to do it.

Green said there is more to being an R.A. than just a free single, and the weekly stipend. The campaign is using these ideas to promote the job. "Experience, leadership, time management. The key is the intangible benefits," she said.

Green said she was given free reign over the project. "They gave me the ball and let me run with it," she said. "It's one of the best experiences I could have."

This program is giving Green a chance to do things she wants. "It allows me to tie in marketing and being an R.A, two things I love," said the senior management major with a concentration in marketing.

Along with these two jobs, Green is also a tour guide and a counselor at summer orientation. She said she does these things because, "I take pride in selling the University to prospective students. There's a lot to offer, it's all there for the taking."

Green also takes time for herself. In her spare time she likes to play tennis and go skiing.

"Work's real important to me. But time away from work is really important, too," Green said. "Going out with my friends is the key to my sanity -- a balance is really important."

Green said her main objective is to be occupied.

"There are always new ways to challenge yourself if you look for it -- and you don't have to look very hard. I just like to keep busy."

Feminist campaigns discussed

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

"A split in the women's movement is not new," said a feminist historian last night to a group of 20 women in the Campus Center.

Sheila Jeffreys is a feminist historian who, while a graduate student at the University of Bradford in England, discovered women's campaigns in the late nineteenth century, to fight injustices, such as incest. "The women were arguing that incest is an abuse of power," Jeffreys said, adding that the all-male House of Commons disagreed.

Sheila Jeffries speaking on feminism of the early twenty century.

"They felt threatened by campaigns that raised the age of consent, or legislation to outlaw rape. They saw it as an effort to pass anti-male legislation," Jeffreys explained.

Another storm of campaigns, from 1906 to the first World War exhibited a period of "political celibacy," as Jeffreys called it. Today, it is called "political abstention." Sixty percent of these women were spinsters and many were widows, she said.

"There was tremendous anxiety about the surplus of women," Jeffreys said. "There was a silent strike -- women having nothing to do with men. It was a global movement to stop white slavery, children's sexual abuse, and other campaigns."

At this same time there came a new movement to counteract these women, called sexology -- the science of sex. These doctors claimed sex was vital, without it women would get sick, she said.

Siding with the sexologists were sex reformers, women who held the same views. Today, these two groups form the right wing while the spinsters have become the militant feminists, according to Jeffreys.

Following the lecture was a discussion of current issues and problems facing today's feminists.

Panel may improve Campus Center

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

The old paintings in the Campus Center could be replaced, new signs may be made, and more exhibits could be shown because the Campus Center Concourse Improvement Panel has been reinstated.

The Campus Center Board of Governors voted unanimously last night to establish the panel. It will be responsible for the aesthetic appearance of the concourse and the Student Union Building, taking care of the furnishings, signs, information displays, and special problems.

"It operated about three years ago and did a lot because there was a lot to be done," said William Harris, the director of the Campus Center.

The panel will be composed of 21 people including students, administrators, and at least two members of the Board.

The panel will make improvement suggestions to Building Operations staff which will actually do the work.

The money for the improvements will come from the fee which the concourse vendors pay, that is given to Building Operations, Harris said.

Anti-abortion group meets tonight

Five members of Women Exploited By Abortion, a new anti-abortion group, will speak at 7 p.m. tonight in the Red Room of Converse Hall at Amherst College.

The group was founded in 1982 in Chicago and and has 10,000 members nationwide, the majority of whom have had abortions, according to a pamphlet distributed by the group.

The group's stated goals include educating women about the "traumatic reality" of abortion, providing counseling for women who have had abortions, and providing a "new element" to the abortion debate.

with revocation of license. The donor must report any loss of license or else be liable for another person who uses the license illegally, Joyce said.

Sean Eagan, a Barselotti's bartender said, "If somebody gets hurt, the bartender, as well as the owner, is to blame." People should, at 21, be responsible for their own actions, but people remember where they get shut off, and that's the bar they're going to tell the police when they get stopped.

"If you're 21 and you get shut off and you can't understand why, then you have no business drinking in a bar. Get a bottle and go home," he said.

A mark of achievement

Herb Ramy

Two weeks ago, I had the somewhat dubious honor of receiving a hickey. For those unfamiliar with the term, a hickey is a dark purple discoloration of the skin achieved through a sucking and biting action on some part of the body. While it is possible for them to be self-inflicted, it is more common to have on given to you by someone else. I received mine on the somewhat common hickey area: the neck.

I was a bit shocked to find I had one when I woke up that morning. Myself and the party involved had agreed to refrain from this particular practice, but it seems that in the heat of the moment this fact was forgotten.

As time went by, my feelings regarding my hickey changed. In the beginning there was of course the embarassment. People had an idea that I was seeing someone. We all know that there are no secrets on residence halls, but until this moment people could turn their heads the other way and ignore it if they chose to. Unfortunately, this scarlet badge could not be ignored. Everyone felt obligated to make some sort of comment.

At first I tried the denial method. 'No, no. It's just a shaving injury.'' This didn't work. Somehow everyone knew I was lying. A hickey's appearance must be in our genetic memory, because even people who had never seen one knew exactly what it was.

Next I decided that if I couldn't deny it, I would hide it. This is known as the turtle neck method. Unfortunately, my wardrobe doesn't include any turtle neck sweaters, and regular ones just wouldn't do. The hickey was high enough in my neck that a regular sweater would only cover half of it. Instead of helping this merely drew attention to it. It looked like I was trying to hide something.

Finally I decided that it wasn't worth all the effort I was putting into it. I would just wear the lowest necked shirt I had, and accept the abuse.

Strangely enough, the abuse never materialized. Sure, everyone had an initial comment to make on who or what I was dating, but after this people's attitudes changed. Especially the attitudes of my male friends. Instead of insults, I was getting nods of approval or looks of respect.

At first I didn't understand, but then it hit me. My hickey left no doubts as to my whereabouts on the previous night. My male friends could for the most part respect that. Sadly, my partner in this action did not get quite the same treatment. Names such as Hoover or Vampirella stuck with her for days. I guess in some areas the old double standard is alive and well.

Well, it's two weeks later, and all traces of my hickey are gone. With it went my new found respect. Don't worry though, I'll get it back. I told you these things could be self-inflicted.

Defending the invasion

Dan Perrin

'Sieg, heil!" Click, the heels of the boots collided and the right arm of a young man shot up, giving me the classic Nazi salute. (No, this is not another radical attack on the "new" right; this is a true story). It was October 26, 1983, I was standing in the rain outside the US Embassy in Ottawa, Canada, the day after the US military intervention in Grenada.

Swirling around me were approximately 120 anti-US involvement in Grenada protesters, a mixture of punk-rockers (European style), Hispanics carrying a Cuban flag, a Nicaraguan flag, and the El Salvador guerrilla's flag. Thrown in were poncho packing peaceniks (decked out in partisan buttons), some students, and a few sixties long-hair leftover types. There was also a middle class couple, who, we found out after driving by them after the demonstration, drove a Lada (a Soviet-made car imported to Canada). As we three anti-anti-protestors approached the crowd singing the Star Spangled Banner, I was carrying a sign that read "GRENADA -- NOW FREEDOM PREVAILS!", and my friends were carrying the American flag.

Needless to say, the protesters were not amused.

The police officers behind the barricade gave us the thumbs up sign, a Marine saluted us from the embassy window, a reporter enthusiastically defended our rights of speech and assembly to a group of punkers who insisted on yelling at us and standing abnormally close, an old man, with a thick East European accent came by, held one corner of the flag till the rain cramped his fingers and left saying "...it is the only way, it's the only way," the US ambassador wrote us a letter, and on the bus ride home, when asked about the conspicuously large sign I carried, I said that when the facts came out, the majority of Westerners, Grenadians, and Americans will agree with the President's actions.

Yesterday, President Reagan visited Grenada, where he received a hero's welcome, he was treated as a liberator just as the Marines who landed were. And now, the facts are out. And some of them are in a book called Grenada Documents: an Overview and Selection. They are a selection from 17 and one-half tons of captured documents published by the US State Department. It is the first time, EVER, that a Communist country's entire bureaucratic structure was captured intact. The selection contains committee minutes, secret speeches, arms, and other totalitarian technology transfer treaties with Cuba and the Soviet Union (they have the technology if you are a leader who has the oppress to stay in power).

Some of the interesting highlights from the documents:

- In a meeting between Major Einstein Louison, Chief of Staff of the Grenadian Army, and Soviet Marshall N.V. Ogarkov, on March 10, 1983, Ogarkov said, "...over two decades ago there was only Cuba in Latin America, today there is Nicaragua, Grenada, and a serious battle is going on in El Salvador."
- Grenada carefully monitored the American media, they always vigorously responded to criticism, sought out correspondents and television producers sympathetic to their view point, hired a public relations firm in New York to monitor less important publications, and even Politburo and Central Committee spent a considerable amount of time discussing a CBS broadcast they did not like.
- Cubans trained Grenadians for security operations against the churches on the island, monitoring all sermons, controlling visitors to church leaders, bringing the leaders and laypersons into contact with Nicaraguan church figures "linked to the theology of liberation and, in general, to the idea of a church committed to the revolutionary positions."
- Only two out of four foreign policy professors in the Five College system knew the papers existed, one professor knew one of the people who helped compile the selection. For those interested, copies of the Grenada Documents have been donated to the University of Massachusetts, Mount Holyoke College, and Amherst College libraries.

Dan Perrin is a UMass student.

All this yet where are we?

Rebecca Thatcher

A recent headline in the Collegian lamented, "Only One IUD Left on the Market." A health professional is quoted as saying it is too bad because the Pill is dangerous to older women. Implicit in this story are some important lessons about the problems of private control of the pharmeceutical industry.

The removal of several varieties of the IUD should force us once to consider the research priorities of this country. It is truly amazing that we have technology that can do just about everything but we don't have one safe, effective and convenient form of birth control. And the price women have paid for this lapse of national priorities is outrageous.

The story of the Dalkon Shield is just one story. It is a particularly gruesome and damning story of the drug corporations in this country but it is only one of many stories of how women's bodies have been sacrificed at the altar of profit and expediency.

From DES to thalidomide to the Dalkon shield, we seem to go from one scandal to another, indeed it is hard to learn about women and medicine without feeling as though I could happily pull the fingernails out of the owner of every major drug company in the country. And try reading Robert Mendohlson's book, Mal(e) Practice without feeling a similar degree of antipathy towards the medical profession. I only mention the medical profession here because too often through ignorance, laziness or sexism, they comply with the abuses of the drug companies.

Investigative reporter Morton Mintz has just released a major work on the Dalkon shield called At Any Cost, Corporate Greed, Women and the Dalkon shield. It is hard to read this book without feeling a little sick inside. The stories are quite horrendous. The health problems caused by the insufficently researched and tested Dalkon Shield are painful and tragic. They range from spontaneous septic abortions to pelvic inflammatory diesease and thousands of women ended up having to have their uteruses removed.

According to Mintz, A. H. Robbins lawyers used unethical strategies, such as saying that a woman who sued the company after getting a grapefruit-sized cyst as a result of the Dalkon shield was of low moral character and probably got sick from too much drugs, sex and rock and roll. (A "legal" tactic which lawyers find effctive in this world of double standards, hence rape is known as the only crime where the victim goes on trial.)

The worst part is that Mintz concludes that with all the pain A.H. Robbins perpetuated upon women by knowingly marketing an extremely dangerous product he insists that what the company did was no different from what any other company would do in a similar situation. Health care by profit-oriented companies will be at best problematic and at worst extremely dangerous.

BLACK AFFAIRS

PUSHED BACK—Rev. Beyers Naude, general secretary of the South African Council of Churches, is ordered back by security forces TUesday as he tries to enter Alexandra, near Johannesburg, where 22 people died during several days of fierce fighting.

Reagan in Grenada with much fanfare

ST. GEORGES, Grenada (AP) – President Reagan arrived in this Caribean island nation today to confer with the region's leaders and honor the 19 Americans killed in the 1983 invasion he ordered to topple a Marxist government.

On hand to greet Air Force One at the Point Salines International Airport were Grenadian Prime Minister Herbert Blaize and his wife, Venetia, and Gov. General Paul Scoon and Lady Scoon. The President's wife, Nancy, did not accompany him.

Reagan and top aides touched down in sunny, 82-degree weather - compared to an overcast 45 degrees in Washington - at an oceanside airport begun with Cuban assistance and completed with $19 million of US funds.

In all, the United States has pumped $74 million into Grenada since the invasion. Major construction includes hotels and a highway.

With Reagan were Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and Donald T. Regan, the White House Chief of Staff. Heavy security was in evidence, with Secret Service agents and blue-uniformed Royal Grenadian police standing along the Grand Anse Highway, rebuilt since the invasion with US funds. Reagan was greeted with signs such as "Come back soon, pal" and "A million thanks, Prez." American flags and Grenadian flags lined his route.

From the airport, Reagan was being driven to a memorial at the American-run St. Georges University School of Medicine, from which 631 students were evacuated during the invasion, to lay a wreath in honor of the American servicemen who died in the military operation.

After meeting with the prime ministers of nine Caribbean nations to discuss trade and other regional issues, the President was proceeding to Queen's Park, a cricket ground and gathering place in this Commonwealth country, for a speech.

Before he left Washington, Reagan said in written answers to Caribbean reporter's questions that the United States stands ready to help if the tiny Caribbean island is threatened with a violent uprising. Administration officials said Reagan would announce steps to strengthen his administration's 12-year plan to bolster sagging Caribbean economies.

The President discussed the US commitment to Grenada in written responses to questions submitted by Caribbean journalists, which were released in question-and-answer form by the White House on the eve of Reagan's flight today to the island nation.

A non-profit foundation based in Boston has provided the television facilities that enabled some of Grenada's 100,000 residents to view President Reagan's visit there Thursday.

The three-island Caribbean nation's first national television broadcasting system is being built through Discovery Foundation, which was formed to assist developing nations.

The foundation, founded and chaired by David C. McCourt, hopes to direct US business expertise on behalf of developing nations in economic development, education and communications.

Nicaragua report stirs controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) – As President Reagan seeks to resume military aid to Nicaraguan rebels, their human rights record is coming under attack again. A new report accuses them of 'systematic" atrocities last year, including murder, rape and mutilations.

The study, citing 197 sworn statements, also accuses the Nicaraguan leftist Sandinista government of human rights violations, although adding that they "appear to be relatively isolated cases."

The report was compiled by Mary Dutcher, a former Missouri assistant attorney general, and was commissioned by the Washington Office on Latin America, a private church-supported human rights group that has been critical of US support for the contra rebels.

The report was attacked Tuesday by Bosco Matamoros, a spokesman for the CIA-organized Nicaraguan Democratic Force, of FDN, the largest rebel army. Matamoros said the report's sponsors were "allied with the Sandinistas" and "distort the reality" of systematic abuses by the government. He acknowledged that FDN soldiers commit occasional abuses, but he added that those caught are tried and imprisoned in FDN jails inside Nicaragua. He said more than 10 contras had been found guilty of abuses since November, but he declined to give details about their offenses or punishments.

The State Department had no immediate reaction to the report, as Reagan told Republican congressional leaders Tuesday he would seek $100 million in new aid for the rebels, including $70 million in lethal military assistance. The report's findings were spot-checked this past week by Jay Heck, an aide to Rep. Peter Kostmayer, D-Pa., and Laurie Schultz, an aide to Rep. James M. Jeffords, R-Vt. Heck and Ms. Schultz said they questioned about 15 Nicaraguans who had given affidavits and found the statements to have been accurately recorded.

Amnesty International and Americas Watch, two other private human rights groups, also have charged that both sides of the Nicaraguan have violated the rules of war.

The new report cites 139 human rights abuses from February to December 1985, based on affidavits from 197 eye-witnesses. Of the 139 incidents, 118 were attributed to contra forces and 21 to Sandinista soldiers.

In the 118 alleged contra incidents - many including multiple violations - the rebels are accused of 399 kidnappings, 116 murders, 19 rapes, 24 mutilations and 32 indiscriminate attacks on civilians. The Sandmistas are accused of 20 murders, one mutilation and three indiscriminate attacks.

Manuel Cordero, minister-counselor of the Nicaraguan Embassy in Washington, conceded Tuesday that "there have been abuses by the military," but he contended that such actions 'have been isolated and the guilty parties who have been found have been punished."

According to the report's affidavits:

- A man in Leon province said that last February, he witnessed contras torturing, killing and mutilating a captured Sandinista soldier.
- Three Sandinista soldiers were found guilty of gunning down a man in Matagalpa who was suspected of being a contra informer.
- A woman in Boaco said she and two of her daughters were raped repeatedly after being captured and taken to a contra command post.
- A woman in Zelaya said she and her husband, a draftee in the Sandinista army, were captured by contras who slit his throat and left his body hanging from a tree.
- Another man in Leon said he was among 20 men kidnapped by contras around Achuapa in August. He said 11 were executed by having their throats slit, and many showed signs of torture.

"The preponderance of the evidence indicates the continuation of a systematic pattern of gross violations committed by Contra forces," the report said. "Violations ... committed by members of the Nicaraguan armed forces appear to be relatively isolated cases." Ms. Dutcher said her study accpted help from neither the Nicaraguan nor U.S. governments, but received information from Nicaragua's independent Permanent Human Rights Commission and from Witness for Peace, an American religious group operating in Nicaragua that is opposed to US aid to the contras.

Meanwhile, the National Endowment for the Preservation of Liberty, which says it tries to focus attention on 'the struggles of freedom fighters," issued a report accusing the Sandinista government of religious persecution, indiscriminate shelling of Nicaraguan villages and forced resettlement of tens of thousands of Nicaraguans. The report mentioned no abuses committed by the contras.

The ladies of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. in collaboration with the Third World Women's Program presents a panel discussion on the topic "Afro American Women's Stories" at 6:00pm on Wednesday Feb. 26 in the New Africa House Library.

Question: WHAT EFFECT DO YOU THINK THE RELEASE OF JAILED SOUTH AFRICAN LEADER NELSON MANDELA WOULD HAVE ON SOUTH AFRICA

Stephen Lee .... 88 Computer Engineering Systems maj.

I think it will raise the spirit of blacks in South Africa to follow and put more confidence in their black leader. Its going to be on Mandella to take it from there.

Indjerjeet Singh Saggu ..88 Electrical Engineering maj.

I think the release of Mandela would create an increase in violence because black South Africans would be likely to seek revenge.

Karen Walker.....88 Micro Biology maj.

It will definately have a positive effect because it would be a major step towards the downfall of the apartheid system of racial diomination in South Africa.

Ian Flockhart.....88 COINS maj.

I dont see how the release of someone who has been incarcerated for 27 years could have any effect on South Africa.

Ralph G. Sbragia...88 Public Health maj.

Hopefully it will have a peace generating effect on the Union of South Africa.

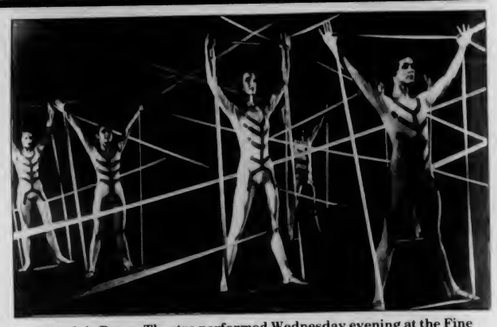
Dance lesson memories

By Natalie Hewitt
Collegian Correspondent

Ask my mother, and she'll tell you that everytime I go to see a remarkable performance by a dance company, I start having regrets about quitting dance lessons years ago. Wednesday night's performance by the Nikolais Dance Theatre left me with that feeling again.

Nikolias Dance Theatre performed at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall to an enthusiastic and impressed audience. It was a night of experimental, fascinating, and beautiful dancing, executed by a group of ten strong and energetic young dancers.



Alwin Nikolais is the creative force behind the company. Creative force is the right term, for he not only is the company's choreographer and director, but he also designs the costumes and lighting, as well as creating the sound scores for his pieces. Nikolais has made his dances a matter that goes beyond the dancers' bodies. The lighting becomes a part of the dance in a way I have never seen before, and many of his innovations left the audience oohing and ahhing for two hours.

In "Pond," the combined effect was a graceful and soothing cytoplasmic movement through the space of the stage by having each member of the company moving on his or her own movable pad. The piece climaxed with a wonderful series of vertical leaps, accompanied by a remarkable lighting effect which created a holograph effect, made the dancers seem to literally move through one another. The "Video Game" delighted the audience with its playful yet eerie use of florescent costumes that made the dancers look like robot figures on a video game screen.

The third dance of the night was a minor disappointment titled "Contact," with its very monotonous beginning. It did, however, pick up steam with Raul Trujillo's solo in which he demonstrated his exceptional balancing technique, and executed leg extensions from a sitting position that were simply a marvel to watch. Tim Harling and James Murphy performed a likable and witty dandified duet which played up their abilities of synchronization.

The last two pieces of the night were truly spectacular. "Tensile Involvement" made clever use of huge ribbons held by the dancers, creating shapes and situations for the troupe to tackle and be entangled in. The final piece called "The Mechanical Organ" was a piece consisting of seven segments, and brilliantly showed off the individual and ensemble talents of the dancers of the Nikolais Dance Theatre. From a Laurel and Hardyesque ensemble romp in "Dime in the Slot" to Lynn Lesniak's limber and seemingly effortless solo in "Doll with Broken Head" to the duet between Raul Trujillo and Alberto Del Saz which captivated the audience with the sheer strength exhibited by these two men in their innovative lifts, Nikolais not only demonstrates his wit and great creative and artistic genius, but shows off his great troupe of fine and talented dancers.

Yes, it did inspire me to open up my drawer full of leotards and start up dancing again.

Nikolais Dance Theatre performed Wednesday evening at the Fine Arts Center.

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

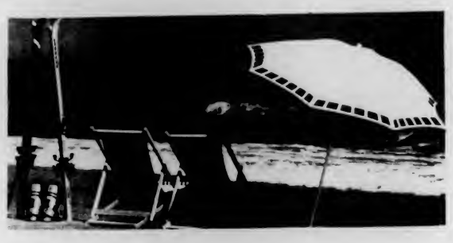
Morning, movie munching monsters the fabulously famous Friday film follies returns resplendantly radiating wonderfully wise words with alliterative aspirations again.

Three really neat movies are coming to the valley this week. (That's why I'm the film columnist, because I can think of really descriptive phrases like "really neat"). The Amherst Cinema has as always, a wonderful weekend planned. Now showing through Saturday, the great, the only Casablanca. This 1942 film, directed by Michael Curtiz, is one of Bogie's three best films. See it as it was meant to be seen, on a large screen. And in an inspired double bill, Woody Allen's Play it Again Sam is also being shown. Allen's film portrays Woody as an insecure nebbish who wraps himself in a fantasy world and asks the ghost of Humphrey Bogart for advice when his lovelife goes from one misadventure to another. After seeing this funny film, you mayy never look at Bogart the same way again.

Weatherby comes to the Academy of Music in Northampton today. This intense film starring Venessa Redgrave explores how a small group of restrained British party goers reacts when a stranger who crashes their party later blows his head off in front of schoolteacher Redgrave. Redgrave's performance is supposeed to be very involving. Some critics have sais that this film is a must see.

In an uncharacteristic move, one of the malls is showing an art film. The Gods Must Be Crazy is a South African comedy about what happens when a Coca-Cola bottle dropped out of an airplane, becomes an object of worship by a tribe of Bushmen. One of the Bushmen played by N!xau decides that the bottle has created too much controversy in his tribe and he goes on a long and comic journey to civilization to return the bottle. Written, produced and directed by Jamie Uys, this 1984 movie is still knocking them out in New York after a solid year of showing. Now playing at the Mountain Farms Mall, you should see it before it leaves next week.

Now playing at the Pleasant Street Theatre in Northampton is Wildrose an independent (mildly feminist) film about a woman mine worker on Minnesota's Iron Range. Lisa Eichhorn (who got rave reviews for her starring roles in Yanks and Cutter's Way) stars as June Lorich a truckdriver for the mines who because of company layoffs is bumped down to the male-dominated world of pit mining. There she works daily with Raurel and Hardyesque ensemble romp in "Dime in the Slot" to Lynn Lesniak's limber and seemingly effortless solo in "Doll with Broken Head" to the duet between Raul Trujillo and Alberto Del Saz which captivated the audience with the sheer strength exhibited by these two men in their innovative lifts, Nikolais not only demonstrates his wit and great creative and artistic genius, but shows off his great troupe.



Elvis fiends: Watch your step for new release due out this time next week.

Junior co-captain Allison Uzzo, one of the top distance swimmers in New England, has an excellent chance at scoring in the 500 and 1,650. Other top UM swimmers include Julie Wilkins (backstroke), Kris Henson (distance freestyles), Melissa Waller (breaststroke) and Sue Freitas (freestyles).

The UMass men's and women's gymnastics teams go into this weekend's action with the men traveling to Temple to compete in a tri-meet against Temple, Princeton, and Westchester, while the women are home to face Southern Connecticut University on Saturday at 1 p.m. in Boyden

The Minutemen (5-4) will be facing an undefeated Temple team, which is one of the strongest in the league, but Princeton and Westchester are not up to par with UMass.

"Temple should be a tough one," said Minuteman coach Roy Johnson. "But we are coming off our best week of practice all season, we're all healthy, so with a little luck we could come home at 8-4."

The Minutemen will be looking for strong performances by their two all-arounders-sophomores Roberto Weil, and Jay Ronayne.

This weekend will be a sort of homecoming for the Minutewomen who have not competed in Boyden for over three weeks. UMass has a much more powerful team than USC, and expect to take the meet handily, and even their record at 4-4.

In other UMass action this weekend, the women's track team will be at the New England championships at Bates College in Maine.

Coach Kalekeni Banda's team finished its dual meet season at 2-2 and will be looking for a high place at the regional meet. Several freshman and sophomores have been impressive this season and Banda said he has high hopes for the meet.

The UMass men's and women's skiing teams will be up against some of the best competition in the East this weekend at the Eastern College Championships at the Middlebury Snow Bowl.

UMass soundly beaten, 68-40

Men, women loose in W. Virginia

COMPILED FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

MORGANTOWN, West Virginia - The University of Massachusetts committed a season-high 26 turnovers while taking a season-low of 39 shots, and fell to West Virginia, 68-40 last night.

The Minutemen fell to 6-11 in the Atlantic 10, 9-17 overall with their third loss in a row. They play at Duquesne on Saturday. (See story below).

The UMass women's team also lost, dropping a 67-61 decision to the Mountaineer women in the game prior to the men's contest. The Minutewomen have now dropped 11 straight A-10 games, six consecutive overall.

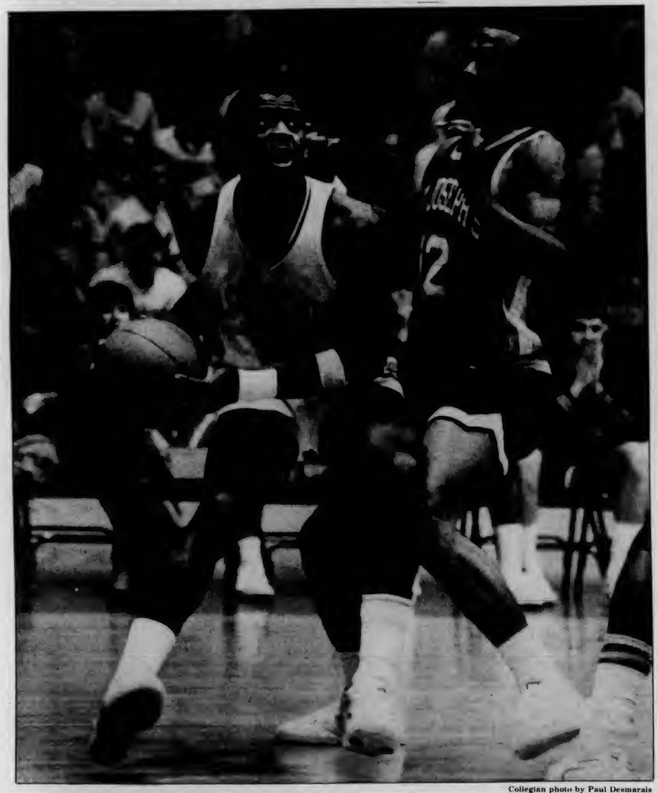
In the men's game, UMass was trailing only 28-21 at halftime before the Mountaineers (14-3 in the A-10 and 19-9 overall) blew the game open by outscoring UMass, 40-19.

WVU before 5,010 fans at its Coliseum, started the second half with an 18-7 run that made it 46-28 and put the game away.

The story of the game was the Mountaineer pressure. Employing a variety of zone presses, West Virginia confused the younger UMass players and following one of UM's frequent turnovers, ran the fast-break to near-perfection.

Senior guard Dale Blaney led the winners with 12 points. Freshman forward Darryl Prue added 11 with senior forward Renardo Brown contributing 10. The Mountaineers committed just 12 turnovers and were 18-of-25 at the line.

UMass had but one player in double figures as Lorenzo Sutton scored 11. Freshman guard David Brown returned to the lineup after missing his first start of the season against Temple due to a stomach muscle injury. He scored seven points.



Junior co-captain Carl Smith did not play well with three points and two assists, but the assists were enough to tie and pass the Minuteman career record of 518 set by Alex Eldridge (1975-78). Smith now has 519 assists in his career.

The Minutemen were 16-of-39 from the floor, the fewest field goals attempted and field goals made this season by UMass. WVU controlled the boards, played tough defense on Sutton and generally played like a team that is now 17-3 against UMass and has never lost to the Minutemen at home.

In other Atlantic 10 men's action, Duquesne defeated Rhode Island and Penn State was a winner over George Washington. That means that UMass is still in seventh place in the league, a game ahead of Rhode Island and a game behind George Washington. On Saturday, UMass is at Duquesne and George Washington is at St. Bonaventure.

If UMass wins and GW loses, a very distinct possibility, the Minutemen and the Colonials would flip a coin for sixth place (since the teams split during the regular season), and a first-round bye in the A-10 tournament.

However, both Rhode Island and Penn State are a game behind UM at 5-12 and should UMass lose and they win, there would be a three-way tie. UM has the nod over Rhode Island, having beaten them twice in the regular season, but the Minutemen split with Penn State, meaning another coin flip could be needed to see if UM slips into eighth place. PSU hosts a good Temple team on Saturday.

Sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton and the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team play in their final home game of the regular season on Saturday at Duquesne. The Atlantic 10 conference playoffs start on Tuesday with first-round action. Sutton is the Minutemen's leading scorer this season.

Minutemen in finale at Duquesne

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team will be looking to end their regular season with a victory over Duquesene as part of a men's-women's doubleheader tomorrow.

The UMass women's team will play the Duchesses at 11:45 a.m. before the Minutemen and the Dukes close out their regular seasons at 2 p.m.

The Minutemen will be playing for a possible chance at the sixth spot in the Atlantic 10 post-season playoffs. The first seven teams receive automatic bids into the quarterfinals of the tourney. The bottom four teams are forced to play a first-round game to get into the quarterfinals.

Chances are, UMass will end up in seventh place and host last-place Rutgers University on Tuesday night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

The task at hand however, is beating the Dukes. UMass defeated Duquesne back on Jan. 23 at the Springfield Civic Center, 69-60.

In that game, the Dukes (7-8 in the league and 12-12 overall going into last night's game at home against a sudden;y-hot Rhode Island team) were without 6-6 foward Dwayne Rawls, their leading rebounder.

As a result, UMass enjoyed a field day off the boards and led by Lorenzo Sutton's 25 points and tough work inside by John Milum, easily handled the Dukes.

Duquesne, coached by Jim Satalin, has the A-10's top-scorer in 6-4 guard Rick Suder. Scoring at a 20.9 points-per-game clip, Suder has a dangerous jump shot that he isn't afraid to use. he scored 24 points (and grabbed six rebounds) against UMass in Springfield.

"Obviously, Suder is a problem we'll have to face," said UM coach Ron Gerlufsen before the team embarked on their current road trip. "He's a great shooter who can fill it up quickly. I think we have the athletic ability to guard him, but Coach satalin does a nice job of getting him the ball where he wants it."

Rawls, although a little undersized for the power forward spot, is a bull under the boards with a third-in-the-league 7.5 a game (7.7 in conference games only).

Duquesne blamed their earlier loss to UMass on Rawls' absence, but Gerlufsen doesn't think he make that much of a difference.

"Of course, missing your best rebounder is harmful to a team, but I think we have the people who can go to the boards with Rawls," the coach said. "I'm not worried that we'll be left behind under the glass."

Minuteman Mutterings: Duquesne leads the season series at 11-6, losing the last two to the Minutemen. Gerlufsen is 2-3 against Satalin, but UMass hasn't lost by more than 10 points to the Dukes in three years.

Women swimmers in NE's

The University of Massachusetts winter sports teams swing into their final full weekend of action headlined by the women's swim team trip to the New England championships.

The Minutewomen finished eighth last season, following a dismal 309 dual meet record. This year, coach Bob Newcomb and his troops went 7-5 over the regular season and have their sights set on a top three finish at the meet, set to go off over the weekend at the University of Maine-Orono.

The Minutemen bring a balanced squad to Maine. Several individual performers have solid chances at placing along with the relays.

Students protest use of funds in South Africa

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

Smith College students voiced angry disapproval Saturday, after the school's Board of Trustees' announced plans to divest only $1.75 million from a current endowment of $22.3 million invested in companies that do business with South Africa.

Students called for a sit-in starting today at 9 a.m. in College Hall.

At a 5 p.m. press conference, Trustee Chairman Euphemia H. Steffey said the college would withdraw holdings from two of 23 companies the school has investments in because they had not signed the Sullivan Principles. The two companies are United States Steel and IMS International, Inc.

Developed in 1977 by the Philadelphia Rev. Leon Sullivan, the principles encourage US corporations operating in South Africa to abolish racial discrimination in the workplace and improve the quality of employees' lives in areas such as housing, schooling, recreation and health facilities.

Smith's endowment, as of Jan. 1, 1986, was $232.8 million with about $22.3 million or 9.6 percent of that invested in companies doing business with South Africa.

Reading from a statement issued by the Board, Steffey said, "We believe that the events transpiring in South Africa require renewed vigilance on our part to ensure that the companies in which we hold investments press actively for reform...Our standard for measuring performance will be the maintenance of a rating of I or II under the Sullivan Principles."

Companies operating under ratings I or II are making "good progress" or "some progress" toward reform, according to a report from Investor Responsibility Research Center, Inc., a private firm based in Washington, DC.

But sophomore Kate Bolland, a member of Smith's Task Force on South Africa, said that even Rev. Sullivan had admitted the principles were invalid because the oppressive nature of the South African state-of-emergency goes against all the freedoms and equality the principles call for.

Chairman of the eight-member Task Force and Smith government professor, Philip Green, said he was "very discouraged that the college still fails to grapple with the issue of total divestment. The situation of the [South African] regime gets worse and worse every year."

Kelly Gerald, a junior government major, called for the sit-in.

"I'm angry. Not surprised, but still angry," Gerald said. "We're going to stay there until they haul us out, it they have the guts."

Steffey outlined a seven point plan the college will follow,

Women doctors on the rise

Less discrimination cited

By BARBARA DeLOLLIS
Collegian Correspondent

Statistics on women pre-med students aren't as shocking as they used to be, according to the chairman of the Pre-Med Advising Committee at the University of Massachusetts.

Dr. Brian O'Connor, who has been advising pre-med students at UMass for 17 years, said that about 30 percent of the students that apply to medical schools from the University are female. "That's about the national average," he said.

O'Connor said that earlier statistics on women pre-med students were low because of discrimination.

"The number of women applying has not been increasing as it should," O'Connor said. He said we are still living in a male dominated world.

Current enrollment at the UMass Medical Center in Worcester is 40 percent women and is approaching the national average of 50 percent, he said.

Pre-med students at UMass are not recognized as such on their diplomas, but meet their requirements through other majors, O'Connor said.

"I can think of at least 50 different majors," he said.

"Usually pre-meds are science majors," said 21-year-old senior Cheryl Hardenbrook. They will usually fulfill the two years of chemistry, one of biology and one of physics that are needed, she said.

"The program is very well organized and the labs are really enjoyable," said Colleen Murphy, a 21-year-old senior. She said that the classes do require much time in labs, however.

"Obviously there's no favoritism, nor is there any discrimination," said O'Connor, referring to the nationwide statistics. He said that many medical schools' admission boards no longer look at the gender of the applicants.

Wendy Chabot, 31, applied to medical schools in the northeast after graduating from UMass in 1980. She said she

A homing pigeon who has failed to live up to his name, Jack/Jackie, takes an afternoon nap in the Collegian newsroom.

'Homing' pigeon out of line

Recently the Collegian came under fire from a rival tabloid for not doing enough investigative reporting. Read on ...

At 11:30 a.m. Friday, employees at the information desk in the Campus Center called to say they had a pigeon. Since watching a pigeon fly about the concourse is always good for a laugh, five Collegian staff members rushed upstairs to investigate.

The bird was not in flight, but rather in a box on the counter. Employees Christopher Yotides and Robin Lawler said a man dropped the cold, wet bird off at the desk, and since Information had no information about pigeons, they called the Collegian.

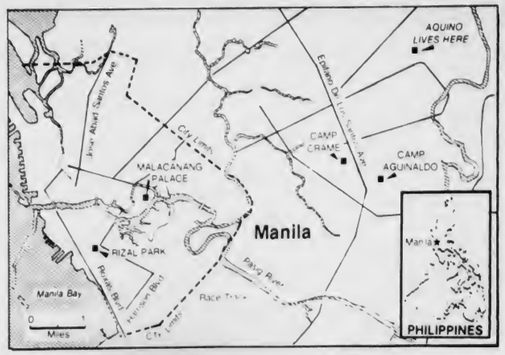
The bird—we'll call it "Jack" or "Jackie"—was apparently a homing pigeon, with a band around its right leg.

A team of three Collegian reporters called various animal agencies, trying to track down the owner by the code on the band.

Calls to the biology department, the Division of Fisheries and Wildlife and the Amherst Veterinary Hospital yielded no clues.

Ellen Mintzer of Arcadia Wildlife in Easthampton gave the number of Walter Wolodzensky, a Northampton resident with a listing of every pigeon registered with the American and International Racing Federations.

Mintzer also warned,"The owner may not be enthusiastic about getting him back. If the bird gets lost, it means it has failed out as a homing pigeon."



Failed out? Say it ain't so, Jack ...

Wolodzensky searched his rosters but could not find the number on Jack's band. He said he only had listings for bands with ARF or IRF before the number. Jackie's band number was NPA 85RB-478.

"Turn him loose. He'll go to wherever he's going," David J. Klingener of the zoology department said.

Late Friday afternoon, as the rain slowed to a drizzle, Jack soared off into the wide-open spaces in search of home.

Marcos denies report that he is leaving Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—President Ferdinand E. Marcos appeared on national television today in a live broadcast, and said claims by rebels that he was preparing to leave the country were an effort to frighten the people.

Radio Veritas, the Roman Catholic Church station that has been a staunch critic of Marcos, had said he was leaving the country.

Marcos appeared with his wife, Imelda, and some of his children and grandchildren.

"Don't believe any of these stories," said Marcos, calling the reports "propaganda lies they are peddling through the air waves.

"They (the reports) are completely without basis. They are intended to frighten our people," Marcos said, directing his men to "use all necessary force" to defend their installations.

He directed soldiers to use small arms to defend themselves but said big weapons like tanks and armored personnel carriers should not be employed "as yet."

"I appeal to civilians to get out of the line of fire," Marcos said.

Several local and foreign reporters were in the hall with Marcos, and the president said this would prove the broadcast was not taped in advance.

As Marcos spoke, thousands of students chanted the name of opposition leader Corazon Aquino outside his heavily guarded palace.

Radio Veritas had broadcast statements by the two rebel military officials, former Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Lt. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, the former deputy armed forces chief, who said "tyranny" had been defeated.

The Radio Veritas announcer then said Marcos was leaving the country. Sources at the presidential palace told reporters that Marcos was resting.

In a battle of broadcasts, the government television replied: "The government remains in full control of the situation."

Announcer Thelma Dumpit said on the government's Channel 4 that her report came from Information Minister Gregoric Cendana, who did not appear.

The radio station, on the outskirts of Manila, had been guarded overnight by troops backing Ramos and Enrile and by hundreds of people chanting the name of Mrs. Aquino.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said last night, "The president appealed earlier today to President Marcos to avoid an attack against other elements of the Philippine armed forces. Regrettably, there are now reports of an attack."

Speakes said Reagan sent Marcos a message through diplomatic channels saying America "cannot continue our existing military assistance if the government uses that aid against other elements of the Philippine military that enjoy popular backing."

Speakes said a decision on a possible US military aid cutoff could come as soon as last night, although it was not issued late last night.

In 1985, the US supplied $40 million in military aid.

Battle-dressed marines, firing tear gas and swinging truncheons, attacked street barricades outside a military camp at dawn today.

They dispersed hundreds of civilians supporting two senior military officials.

Many people tumbled and fell as they tried to escape the troopers, according to radio reports from the scene. There were no immediate reports on casualties.

Witnesses said some students tried to link arms to stop and block the marines.

An Associated Press reporter said that at about the same time, hundreds of soldiers cheered and a crowd outside applauded as defecting air force men arrived aboard seven helicopters at Camp Crame.

In the first of four helicopters to land, a man waved a white flag and about 24 military men left the aircraft as rebel national police manning the headquarters camp applauded. The other helicopters followed in a major shift by air force officials to the rebels.

Reagan warns Marcos

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Reagan warned Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos against taking military action against the forces rebelling against him yesterday, saying that such a move would cause "untold damage" to the relationship between the United States and the Philippines.

A White House spokesman made the announcement at the White House after Reagan met with his senior foreign policy advisers and U.S. Ambassador Philip Habib, who just returned from meetings in the Philippines with Marcos and opposition leader Corazon Aquino.

Activist fears pattern of greedy youth

Southern belle turned civil rights activist, Virginia Foster Durr, addresses a reception Saturday at the Jones Library in Amherst.

By JOSEPH R. TIGAN
Collegian Staff

Virginia Foster Durr sat complacently as the conversation turned from politics to racism to the institution of marriage.

At a reception held in honor of her newly published book, Outside the Magic Circle: The Autobiography of Virginia Foster Durr, the civil rights activist approached as many issues as she did literary and political patrons attending the reception.

"The mentality of today's youth isn't oriented toward politics or movements as it was in the early and mid'60s," Durr said. "Now it seems all they are interested in is money."

Greeting nearly 25 persons at the reception in Jones Library in Amherst Saturday, Durr said that today's youth doesn't want to discuss anything "of real weight.

"Young people today want to find a financial base first, before they consider attacking issues of truth or peace," Durr said. "The biggest movement I see today is the movement toward getting jobs."

According to Durr, the present generation doesn't really have a great amount of reverence for people like Martin Luther King or Rosa Parks. It was Durr who helped Parks set the civil rights movement in motion after Parks refused to go to the back of a bus in Montgomery, Ala.

"I don't understand why there aren't as many movements on today's campuses," Durr said. "If it were me, I would try to join some type of organization that would help me become familiar with how our government works—something like a peace organization or the League of Women Voters."

The 82-year-old Durr, who worked with Eleanor Roosevelt in order to abolish the poll tax, said that everything she worked for, she won.

"But I'm afraid that it didn't do much good," Durr said. "The work I did with others may have made great political changes, but I don't think the economic trends were ever changed."

Even in her battle with US Sen. James O. Eastland, who brought Durr before the Internal Security Subcommittee on accusations of communistic leanings, Durr said she may have won the battle but not the war.

"Although we have free speech in this country, people are still heavily criticized if they speak out on thing such as public ownership or socialism," Durr said. "In my day it was the civil rights movement that apparently made me suspect."

WOMEN'S FORUM

Women's Forum is a weekly listing of events related to women's issues. Notices should be sent to the Women's News Editor, care of the Collegian, by the Friday before the event.

The Third World Women's Program of the Everywoman's Center will be starting a Lesbians of Color Support Group March 6. The group will meet for eight consecutive Thursdays from 7 to 9 p.m. at the center. Registration is required by March 6. Further information is available by calling the center at 545-0883.

Monday—The Amherst Child Care Resource and Referral will open a Toy Lending and Resource Library for registered day care and center-based programs. The library, located in the basement of the Jones Library, will lend child education materials for a yearly fee of $12 for center-based programs and $7 for family day care centers. Further information is available from the Jones Library.

—Nicki Nichols Gamble, executive director of Planned Parenthood of Massachusetts, will speak on "The Politics of Reproduction: Old Wine, New Bottles" at 4:30 p.m. in Room 10 Seelye Hall at Smith College. The lecture is sponsored by the Smith College Project on Women and Social Change.

Wednesday—A panel discussion on "Career Choices: Afro-American Women's Stories" will be held at 6 p.m. in the New Africa House Library. The panel is sponsored by Alpha Kappa Alpha and the Third World Women's Program of the Everywoman's Center. Further information is available by calling Sharon Mills at 546-5441 or the center at 545-0883.

—Joan Banks Dunlop will speak on "Abortion and Family Planning in the Third World: What Needs to be Done and Why" at 3:30 p.m. in the west lecture hall of Franklin Patterson Hall at Smith College. Dunlop is the president of International Women's Health Coalition, a non-profit organization dedicated to improving women's reproductive health in the Third World. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Abortion battle continues

By DAN PERRIN
Collegian Correspondent

Members of both sides of the abortion debate clashed at a forum hosted by an anti-abortion group at Amherst College Friday.

About 120 people attended the forum, sponsored by Women Exploited By Abortion, to listen to five members of the group talk about their experiences of abortion.

The group was formed in 1982 in Chicago, and claims a membership of over 10,000. Most members are women who have received abortions, according to a pamphlet distributed by the group.

"Everybody I talked to just said 'have the abortion and they'll (the clinic) take care of you.' Well they didn't."
—Cynthia Moriarty, a member of Women Exploited By Abortion

Cynthia Moriarty, who joined WEBA just two weeks earlier, discussed her feelings about an abortion she had.

"Everybody I talked to just said 'have the abortion, and they'll (the clinic) take care of you,'" Moriarty said. "Well, they didn't. When they asked me if I had any questions, I said 'yes, a thousand,' and the nurse looked at me like 'Oh no, not one of these women again.'"

"Then when I returned to the clinic and was being sized for the abortion, I began crying hysterically on the table," she said. "The doctor looked at me and said to me, 'Oh come on, even mothers have abortions.'"

Tina Carter, a WEBA member for two months, said she had turned to alcohol to "take away the hurt, to numb the pain" of abortion. She said she couldn't deal with the guilt and had two choices—"suicide or turn to Jesus Christ."

Most of the people who attended the lecture were women. A question and answer session held afterward went on for over an hour and a half, and was punctuated by clapping, audience members arguing with each other, and several shouting matches.

Susan Szetela, the education director for Massachusetts Citizens for Life, introduced the speakers and fielded most of the questions from the audience because the speakers from WEBA said they could not properly answer many of the "political" questions from the audience.

FYI:

A discussion and lecture titled, "How Open is Your Mind?" will be held at 9 p.m. today at Hampshire College in the main lecture hall of the Franklin Patterson Building.

The main speaker will be Dr. Doug Chismar, chairman of the philosophy department at Ashland College, who will be speaking about mind expansion and the Radical Jesus. The event is sponsored by the Hampshire College Christians.

The American Red Cross will hold a blood drive from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Campus Center. It is necessary to collect 200 pints a day to fill the need in Western Massachusetts hospitals, and 47 percent of the blood collected comes from college students, according to Red Cross statistics.

The blood drive is being sponsored by the Collegian.

Education theorists find schooling unimaginative

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A conference critically examining education and the conservative tendencies shaping it, turned away more than 300 people due to a full turnout, the conference coordinator said.

About 350 people attended the two-day conference held in the Campus Center which featured major speakers in the field who voiced concerns over education, said Juan Aulestia, coordinator of the "Working Conference on Critical Pedagogy."

The program, Aulestia said, "put together the most powerful representatives of educational workers from across the nation and Canada."

Henry Giroux, one of the major contemporary theorists in critical pedagogy and professor of education at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, said, "The field of education is in crisis."

Giroux said the conference was held to respond to the conservative attack on education and to become more programmatic in redefining what education is and should be.

Some of the major issues examined, Giroux said, were the relationships between schools and culture, bilingual education, increasing teacher powerlessness, hidden curriculum and relationship between language and power. The present crisis in education, he said, "has historical roots and has been going on for years."

One of the larger concerns that make up this crisis is illiteracy, Giroux said. He added that US Education Secretary William Bennett is an effective spokesman for the middle and working classes but that Bennett "is not concerned with equity."

Citing illiteracy, Giroux said education must first respond to those ignored in our population who "need to be empowered so they can someday read [William] Shakespeare." He added that those involved in critical pedagogy are interested in first teaching people who can't read, rather than Bennett and others who are overly concerned with teaching more Shakespeare.

Health Services makes room for women doctors

Gender gap closing

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Staff

The staff at the University of Massachusetts Health Services is following a nationwide trend of an increase of women in the medical field.

Women doctors constitute one-third of the UHS medical staff, with six full-time women doctors on a staff of 16.

Dr. Ann McKinnon, who came to the UHS staff in January, replaced a male doctor.

McKinnon, a pediatrician and internist, previously worked for Massachusetts General Neighborhood Health Centers. She is interested in working at UHS because she is "interested in sports medicine and women's health."

Six women doctors on staff are more than she has ever worked with before, McKinnon said.

"There are more women than ever before in medical schools and in the profession," said Rick Tessler, a medical sociologist at the University. "This is especially so of the UMass medical school (in Worcester)."

There were 33 percent women admitted nationwide into medical schools in 1985. The UMass medical school accepted 49 percent women and 51 percent men for the 1985 academic year, according to Jane Cronin, director of admissions. This was a large increase from 1984, when only 40 or 42 percent of women were accepted, she said.

"As medical schools turn out more women there will be more women doctors," said Dr. Thomas McBride, director of UHS.

University policy is that when a position is available, the opening is advertised nationally. There is an average of one opening every two years.

"We advertise that we are an affirmative action institution," McBride said. "We encourage women and minority applicants."

"People here are remarkably open-minded and liberal," McKinnon said.

had no particular problems in getting accepted.

Chabot, who graduated from Tufts Medical School, is now a resident in pediatrics at Bay State Hospital in Springfield.

"Applying to medical school is almost like a full time job," said 23-year-old Patricia McQuilikin. She graduated from UMass last year, and "decided to take a year off before going back to school for four more years."

McQuilikin said that applying to medical schools is not only costly, but time-consuming because interviews at each school are a necessary part of applying.

"What's frustrating is the whole admissions process," said Hardenbrook.

"They really keep you up in the air," she said. "The waiting is the biggest hassle."

McQuilikin said that a few years ago, the trend in med school interviews was to ask women if they intended to have a family. She said she resented the question, because "they wouldn't ask men that."

O'Connor said that the academic world does not accommodate women who want to take time off for a family, as most careers do. Medical schools, however, are starting to provide support groups for women, he said.

Beginning a family while in medical school is very difficult, but "it's not unheard of," Chabot said.

Students fear future

Poll shows fears

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

A majority of undergraduates across the country are "very apprehensive" about the future and 35 percent expect a nuclear war within their lifetimes, according to a 1984 survey released earlier this month.

The students polled also were concerned about the quality of higher education and believed the academic needs of students should be given more attention by administrators and faculty.

These and other results of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching survey were released in the Feb. 5 issue of the Chronicle of Higher Education.

Based on a random computer sample of 5,000 undergraduates at 310 colleges and universities, both two-and four-year schools, questions were given on topics that ranged from the prospect of nuclear war to other social, political, and economical issues which might affect students' lives.

According to the Chronicle article, the survey showed that 91 percent of the students believed "more effort should be made to improve US-Soviet relations" and 42 percent said that "realistically, an individual can do little to change society." Twenty-two percent thought it was "probably unfair to bring children into the world considering current prospects for peace."

Professor Harry Schumer, director of undergraduates in the University of Massachusetts psychology department, said these statistics generally reflect the concerns of the age group of the survey.

Schumer said there are two factors guiding college-age people's thoughts on the fear of nuclear war and the future safety of society in general.

The natural idealism of youth, the idea of what "ought to be or can be" conflicts with the reality of "what is" in society and this causes the concern over future events, he said. The second factor is that they are just beginning to make decisions about their careers, their futures, establishing identities and autonomies in life.

"With all this," Schumer said, "comes a fear of 'what will happen?'"

"This is the first generation who, on the average, feel they will not be as well off as their parents, or the previous generation," Schumer added. "Because they have been brought up in an affluent society, today's generation expects a lot more and this relates to anxiety about the future and this translates to the world situation."

Almost four-fifths of those surveyed "said they were satisfied with their education," according to the Chronicle article. But the survey also showed there "were frustrations and disappointments that, for millions of students, constituted a largely negative evaluation of the college-going experience."

Other findings by the survey:

- Of "goals considered very important or fairly important," 92.2 percent of students cited financial success, 96.8 percent career success, and 97 percent intellectual development.
- "Most faculty members at my college are strongly interested in undergraduates' academic problems," say 59.4 percent.
- "A woman should have freedom of choice on abortion," 75.3 percent agreed.
- Fifty-six percent said "These days, you hear too much about the rights of minorities and not enough about the rights of the majority."

Know unions from worker's view

Rusty Denton has finally made me angry enough to respond to his uninformed opinion. I think he and other people have a long way to go to understand unions, especially after reading his article in last weeks Collegian titled "Unions Seek Power."

I sincerely doubt that Denton is in agreement with "several of their (unions) stated aims"—if he was, he would probably have more sympathy for the working people of this country (a full 90 percent).

Unions are hardly insulated from risks—if they were, they would certainly have more than 19 percent of the total U.S. workforce as members. I am not saying unions are perfect, but at this moment there is no other alternative.

I would like to remind readers that all the benefits enjoyed by workers today were not given to them because of management's beneficence. No, rather they were granted because workers acted collectively, through unions and otherwise, to fight for health insurance, unemployment benefits and social security. Some of these benefits are mandated by law. But many benefits that employers provide are done so to "keep the wolf from the door," that is, to keep their employees from organizing.

Unions do not sell people on the notion that the "world owes you a good life," but they do work under the principle that one should be treated fairly. Denton cites the U.S. autoworkers being mad at President Reagan. (They are angry at what he stands for, that is, what's good for business is good for the United States, and workers be damned.) One could argue their anger is misplaced. The workers, however, have a right to be mad at the automotive companies for poor management. After all, was it the worker's fault that the companies made a decision to continue producing dinosaur-like, gas guzzling cars after American consumers clearly indicated that with ever increasing gas prices, they would prefer to purchase energy efficient cars? No, I do not believe that the auto assembly workers ever had a say in that corporate decision.

Yes, there is a better way, but we do not live in a utopia. If we did, unions would not be necessary. Yes, unions do seek power, but why shouldn't workers have more say over the conditions they work in? But perhaps people will not understand what unions really stand for until they too become workers.

Amherst hates...?

David Valade

"Amherst hates America, too. It's like we're always on the wrong side." So says Loren Spivack, former president of the UMass Republican Club, in The Boston Globe Magazine's Jan. 19 issue. Maybe he's right, but it's more likely that the people of Amherst have taken the beliefs this country was founded on literally. Many of us see shortcomings in a nation not reaching the ideals on which it was founded.

"He has plundered our seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people. He is at this time transporting large armies of foreign mercenaries to compleat the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation." These are the words Thomas Jefferson wrote in The Declaration of Independence. These words could equally be sent to President Reagan by the people of Nicaragua. We fought a revolution for the right to self-determination. By funding the contras, mining Nicaraguan harbors, and generally interfering in their internal affairs, we are denying them their right to self-determination. Many people in Amherst support Nicaragua's right to decide their own form of government. This may be Amherst on the "wrong side," but it is on the side this country was founded on.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness." With this, our founding fathers claimed the equality of men. They left out women, blacks (at that time slaves), and Native Americans. Amherst has a history of trying to redress the wrongs summed up in this statement. Wrongs that persist to this day. This is not out of hate for America, but rather out of a belief that "The American Dream" should include everyone that wishes to partake of it, regardless of their race or sex. Amherst may be on the wrong side, but at least it's on the side of the people.

"Congress shall make no law...abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or of the right of the people to peaceably assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." Maybe the problem in Amherst is that we take this too seriously. We are unafraid to use our right to voice our objection to injustice perpetrated in the name of our country.

Maybe Amherst doesn't hate America, but rather hates how far it has strayed from the ideals that it was founded upon. We have a President who wants to go back to the values that made this country great. How come he ignores so much that this country was founded on?

Amherst may be "on the wrong side," but I'd rather be with Amherst if this is true. I'd rather be on the side of the people that are left behind and denied the basic rights this country was founded on.

Systematic harassment

Timothy Kress

I was arrested on Dec. 5 in the Whitmore Administration Building for failing to leave that building by 5 p.m. I was one of a group of 19 people who were protesting the illegal takeover of the Student Activities Trust Fund by Vice Chancellor Madson and Student Activities Director Randy Donant.

This student group is known as START—Students Advocating Rights Together. We are against the administrative attempt to assert control over student funds which are by Trustee documents supposed to be administered by the students themselves.

Presently, the administration is trying to avoid funding the position for the fourth attorney at LSO, which is obviously a necessity for students whose rights have been violated. The fourth attorney is now working as a temporary employee, without full University benefits. The students have entrusted a portion of their annual $88 SATF fee to properly fund a viable LSO. This is student money, being spent to protect students in this giant institution. It is obvious why the University is determined to hamstring LSO: LSO has the power to sue the University and is willing to do so if a student's rights have been abused.

The consequence of my civil disobedience is being found guilty of violating a section of the Student Code of Conduct. Four of my fellow protesters were found innocent of the same charges before my hearing took place. The administration, desperate for guilty verdicts, switched hearing boards to one that would be more favorable to their point of view.

I defended myself to the best of my ability as a non-lawyer. (My advocate was forbidden from addressing the board). The place of the hearing had been changed from the neutral turf of the Student Union to the boardroom in the vice chancellor's office. My request to have an open hearing was denied by the board, although the prosecutor agreed to it beforehand. Luckily for me, I demanded a tape of the proceedings. My procedural rights were thoroughly violated. This so-called neutral board was only interested in one thing: to get a guilty verdict any way possible. I am innocent. I have never even entertained the thought of participating in a "Mass Disturbance." Where they dreamed this idea up, I will probably never know.

The main question is why was I found guilty on the same charge as four people who were previously found innocent? Nothing unusual or different occured in my trial than in theirs. It was not alleged that I did anything differently than the others. The star witness for the prosecution, Dean of Students William Field, admitted that the term "Mass Disturbance" was never mentioned in Whitmore on Dec. 5. He didn't even remember seeing me in Whitmore that day. So why the guilty verdict? I can only hope that justice will be served in the process of appeal which I am pursuing now.

It seems like an incredible irony that I was protesting to ensure that there would never be another Yvette Henry, and in the process I have become one myself. The administration hasn't had the chance to violate my civil rights to the extent that they did Henry's, but the principle is the same. The administration has arbitrarily decided to proclaim me guilty, to label me as an incitor of a Mass Disturbance, a record which, if I lose my appeal, will follow me for life. To any sensible person, it should be obvious that this dual system of justice is not just in any way.

I am proud to have been a part of the demonstration to save LSO for the student body. I am now a walking textbook example of why we need to preserve the LSO. I am thankful that the LSO is still strong enough to be able to handle my appeal despite their back-breaking case load. I urge my fellow students to come to the aid of LSO and the SATF. We must force the administration to stop the systematic harassment of the LSO and the people who have been arrested defending it. I have faith that justice will be served and that the University will clear my name. My only question now, in the words of Rodney Dangerfield, is "Why me?"

Timothy Kress is a UMass Student.

Choosing remedies painful

Dode Levenson

I never get sick. Well, almost never.

Last week, it happened. I was S - I - C - K sick, with a strong desire to become healthy again, so I asked my friendly neighborhood pharmacist what I should take to get me back in business.

"Aisle 10," she responded. So I moseyed over to aisle 10 to what I thought would be the solution to my problem. What greeted me there was another problem altogether.

Lining both sides of the aisles as far as the eye could see were cures for every ailment or ache in the book. In fact, that was the problem: every cold symptom, every fever symptom, every flu symptom, every disease symptom, every symptom symptom had a dozen or more accompanying remedies in aisle 10.

It was a hypochondriac's dream—but my nightmare. I just wanted to get better. I didn't want to have to choose between good tasting, or foul tasting, liquids, solids, pills, capsules, caplets, tablets, or any other form of medicine. I simply wanted to get the one that would work.

The task before me now was figuring out how to choose which one of these medicines would be best for me.

I began, foolishly enough, trying to judge the product by the name of it. I noticed practically all of the medications had names that sounded like they came straight from the laboratory. There was Formula 44D, Actifed, Sudafed, and Robitussen, just to name a few. Absent from the shelves were "Joe's Cure-all" and "Sam's Feel Better Medicine." Who thinks up these names anyway? What does Tylenol mean? Is that the name of Johnson and Johnson's racehorse? Why did they call it Formula 44d? What ever happened to formulas 1-43, a,b, and c? Were they all failures?

Since choosing a product by the name didn't seem to work out, I decided to make the selection based on what each product claimed it could do. One said "Sustained Action Nasal Decongestant." Right next to that one was the dangerously similar "Antihistamine PLUS a Nasal Decongestant."

Despite the differences in form, all of these products had virtually the same claim with minor exceptions: some boxes had "Extra Strength" plastered all over the place, while others were either for children or expectant mothers. If that wasn't enough, I had the store brand to choose from—the same product, but with a slight variation on the name. For instance, Tylenol would be Trythisall, or something like that. It was like seeing the old Wacky Packages come back to life.

Since they all claimed to do basically the same thing, I decided to choose the product on the one thing that would set these cures apart from each other: price.

Price, I have concluded, is where the manufacturers must deliberately make every attempt to confuse an already confused and ill person by varying the size, amount, and frequency so that it is damn near impossible to figure out which one is the best deal for the money. For example, one product had 40 capsules for $3.50—but you had to take two capsules every four hours. Another had only 10 capsules for the same price, but you only had to take one every eight hours. By the time I got to the liquids, where ounces were the unit of measure as opposed to capsules, caplets, tablets, or pills, the only thing that was clear to me was that I had to make a decision and get out of the store.

In desperation, I remembered what my mother used to give me when I was sick, and I purchased that same bottle of generic asprin and bolted out the door. Did I make the right choice? The only thing leftover from the flu last week is this nagging headache that keeps coming back every time I try to figure out how many ounces of liquid equals how many capsules equals how many caplets equals ..

California floodwater continues to recede

LINDA, Calif. (AP)—Floodwaters from nine days of nearly relentless storms continued to recede yesterday in ravaged northern California communities, but thousands of people were still unable to return home.

A leaking 400-foot bulge in a levee at Robbins that spurred the evacuation of 400 residents Saturday showed only "minor seepage" yesterday, said spokesman Dale Follas of the Sutter County Office of Emergency Services.

The sag in the west levee of the Sutter Bypass was shored up and was close to being stabilized. "When that is confirmed, we can allow people back in," Follas said.

Robbins is about 10 miles south of Yuba County's Linda-Olivehurst area, where 26,000 people fled Thursday night after a levee broke on the south fork of the Yuba River

Colleges address divestment

WORCESTER (AP)—Clark University in Worcester will divest of all its stock in companies doing business in racially troubled South Africa by 1988 if apartheid is not abolished, the school's trustees have voted.

"Many US corporations have been exemplary in their conduct of business within the Union of South Africa, and their voices have contributed to the discussion of the need to eliminate apartheid," Richard P. Traina, president of Clark, said in a statement Saturday.

"At the same time, these companies are necessarily powerless in effecting the degree of change required to end the oppression that is taking place."

The Clark trustees set May 31, 1987, and June 30, 1988, as target dates for selling stock, depending on the degree companies adhere to the Sullivan Principles in trying to promote equal hiring of blacks in South Africa, said Alicia Ianiere, assistant communications director.

Ianiere said she had no figures of dollar amounts of the school's endowment that would be affected by the divestiture policy.

Students at Tufts University in Medford Saturday held a rally outside the quarterly meeting at the university's trustees to protest the board's decision not to divest of South African-related investments.

including divestment from companies that haven't signed the principles, to stop purchasing the securities of banks that lend money to the South African government, divesting from companies that fall into category III—"poor performers"—of the principles, and expecting companies whose securities it continues to hold to provide evidence by June 30, 1987 of active efforts toward improving black life.

"We're taking a careful approach to the decisions that have to be made with regard to this college," Steffey said.

The approach is too careful, said senior Suzinne Pak, Chairwoman of the Senate Ethical Investment Committee, a 16-member student government group.

"We're very disappointed," Pak said. "They did not fulfill our proposal which we submitted in October, which called for total divestment."

"It's made the students angrier because it's a sign that they don't take us seriously and they still think the Smith campus is a college of daughters. We're a campus of concerned, intelligent women who care what's going on with our tuition money."

Pak said the Trustees meager divestment efforts "showed how cowardly they really are." She said her committee would resubmit the total divestment proposal and continue pressure with rallies and demonstrations.

Record Review

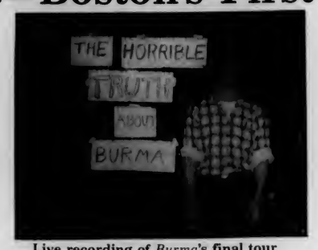
Mission of Burma—Boston's First

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

A WING AND A PRAYER (Relix)
Matt Kelly

Organized around harmonica/guitarist Matt Kelly, best known for his work in Kingfish, A Wing and a Prayer is a sort of Golden Palminos of the West Coast. The album features Bob Weir, Brent Mydland, and Jerry Garcia of the Grateful Dead as well as former members of Kingfish and the New Riders of the Purple Sage, Quicksilver and Moby Grape. But the real hero of the album is Dave Torbet, now deceased, who manages to liven up side two, saving the album from becoming the bad Bobby and the Midnights album which seems very possible by the end of the first side. The album was recorded in two parts, one in 1974, and the other within the past 5 years.

With the exception of one song, the first side of the album contains a number of slow, easy going ballads which are pretty weak although Mydland sings much better than an almost inanimate Weir. The second side is a good deal more lively and includes a version of the Pigpen tune "Next time you see Me," which features no members of the Grateful Dead but has the beginning of a great Michael Bloomfield solo which gets cut off by Robbie Hoddinnott (Kingfish)'s Duane Allman impersonation.



In sum, the album has some good boogie-woogie on the second side and some moderately interesting ballad material. The first side is for aficionadoes only.

SHOWDOWN (Alligator)
Albert Collins, Robert Cray, Johnny Copeland

Less of a showdown than a great album with three of the greatest living blues guitar players, Showdown has no guitar duets but eachsolo is fine in its own right. Each player has his own style, Albert the noisiest, Robert the cleanist, and Johnny somewhere in the middle but perhaps the best player of all. Both Copeland and Cray are students of Albert Collins and the master has taught them well. This is a seminal album. If you want to buy one blues album this year, this should be it.

JIMI PLAYS MONTEREY (Reprise)
Jimi Hendrix Experience

Jimi Plays Monterey is a re-issue of Jimi Hendrix's show at the 1967 Monterey Pop Festival, which has been remastered for better sound quality. The other major

Live recording of Burma's final tour change is the addition of four songs in place of the Otis Redding set which was on the other side. The original was one of the greatest documents of the 1960's and featured no original songs by Hendrix, only covers of other musician's songs: "Like a Rolling Stone," "Wild Thing," and two others. Those are all on the re-issue as well as "Purple Haze," "The Wind Cries Mary."

But most of the added songs are very close to the album versions, so one must ask, "Was it worth it to eliminate the Otis Redding side?" I'm not so sure. It is nice to have the whole Hendrix show, but unless a re-issue of the whole

Otis Redding show is planned, the merit of the addition of the additional Hendrix songs weighed against the loss of Redding singing "Shake," "Respect," "(I Can't Get No) Satisfaction" is limited at best.

On its own Jimi Plays Monterey is a great record, but at what cost?

PSYCHOCANDY (Reprise)
Jesus and Mary Chain

Psychocandy has been criticized in a lot of papers as being nothing but an attempt at being as shocking as possible, but Jesus and Mary Chain are really nothing more than a psychedelic band who seems to have been heavily influenced by the early Velvet Underground. They are not even as shocking as the Velvets were, but all in all, a pretty good band. They use lots of distortion, a steady beat, and a nice amount of noise. Not nearly as clean a sound as Shreikback but that only works to their advantage.

HISTORIC HOT TUNA (Relix)
Hot Tuna

This is the second live Hot Tuna album to be released in the past year. The first one was of a radio broadcasst from 1975 which featured Jorma Kaukonen on acoustic guitar and Jack Casady on bass. Historic Hot Tuna is made up of pieces of two shows from 1971. An acoustic show from the studios of KSAN with Jorma, Jack, violinist Papa Lohn Creach, and a drummer, probably Sammy Piazza and an electric show from the closing week of the Fillmore West with the same line up.

The acoustic side is one of the best Hot Tuna recordings I've ever heard. The instruments sound pretty together and the songs are fresh, which is nice since they are mostly old blues/ragtime songs. The electric side features a good representation of their electric set at the time, including a fairly strong vewrsion of "Come Back Baby." The only complaint about this record is that the performances have been circulating for a while, how about some electric 1975 or something? But this well-recorded album is as good if not better than most albums that Hot Tuna recorded when they were around. This album is highly recommended for people who have listened to Hot Tuna for a long time and for those who want to find out what they were all about.

THE HORRIBLE TRUTH ABOUT BURMA (Ace of Hearts) Mission of Burma

Mission of Burma was arguably the best band to come out of Boston since Aerosmith and J. Geils. Albeit they played a different sort of music they were ground breakers in the late new wave scene and while they never had a hit album, they were always known as part of the vanguard of the second wave of the new wave. The Horrible Truth... is a collection of recordings from their last tour before they broke up due to guitarist Roger Miller's gradual hearing loss. All the songs are previously unreleased and show Mission of Burma to be in fine form. Mission of Burma had a driving beat which Miller was always playing over. The rhythm section had no guitar, only bass and drums and the music never slowed down. What's more, Mission of Burma had a sense of humoor which is rare in the pretentious world of Rock' n' Roll.

The Horrible... is a performance with a glimpse of Boston's finest. The result is a pretty inspirational album. You have to hear it to believe it.

next weekend, before coming home to finish off their season against against New Hampshire on March 8.

The men's meet consisted of the four teams: Umass, Princeton, Westchester, and Temple, competing at the same time, in front of the same judges. Temple took the meet with a final tally of 270.15. The Minutemen were second with a 239.75, followed by Princeton at 220.60, and Westchester bringing up the rear with a 173.60.

The Minutemen (7-5) were up against stiff competition from a Temple team that still remains undefeated in the league.

"Temple has a very tough lineup," said UMass head coach Roy Johnson after the meet. "It would have been great if we could have gotten a little closer to them, but all in all I have to be satisfied with our performance today."

Sophomore Jay Ronayne came through with another strong performance on the all around scoring a 48.90. Also highlighting the Massachusetts effort was junior Phil Gorgone. He is a multi-specialist, competing in five out of six events. He had an especially good day, scoring the team high of 8.75 on the parallel bars.

The next meet for the men will be next weekend when they take on army at West Point.

Boggs loses arbitration

NEW YORK (AP)— American League batting champion Wade Boggs of the Boston Red Sos lost his record $1.85 million arbitration case, the players union said yesterday.

Boggs' case was heard Friday, and the arbitrator ruled that the third baseman would have to accept the Red Sox' offer of $1.35 million. Boggs won his 1985 arbitration ruling, taking $1 million from the team.

Boggs batted .368 last season in 653 at-bats. He had 78 RBI and eight home runs.

The case was the final one to be heard and gave the baseball owners a 20-15 victory in the 35 cases heard this year.

Although the Red Sox star lost his award ruling, it was the largest ever derived from an arbitration hearing. Last year, Tim Raines of the Montreal Expos won his case and earned $1.2 million.

Pitchers Orel Hershiser of the Los Angeles Dodgers won his arbitration case this year and will be paid $1 million in 1986 in the second-largest award given this year.

Of the other losers, outfielder Gary Ward of the Texas Rangers won the second-largest award, $865,000. He had asked the Rangers for $930,000.

The 27-year-old Boggs has been with the Sox for four seasons. He hit .325 in 625 at-bats in 1985 after leading the American League in hitting in 1983 with a .361 average over 582 times to the plate.

points.

For UMass, freshman foward David Brown had seven points along with solid work off the boards, but then Tom Emerson's six points off the bench is the next significant contribution.

Three UMass starters, foward Duane Chase, center John Milum, and junior point-guard Carl Smith, combined for only eight points. Smith and Milum have both struggled offensively as of late and will need to improve their offensive work if UM has any prayer of advancing in the A-10 tournament.

Minuteman Mutterings: UMass will host Rutgers in the first-round of the A-10 tourney on Tuesday night at 7:30. The other first-round game will see Penn State at Rhode Island.

The UM-Rutgers winner plays at West Virginia in the quarterfinals on Thursday night with the Penn State-URI winner at St. Joseph's. Temple will host George Washington and St. Bonaventure is at home against Duquesne in the other quarterfinal games. . Temple and West Virginia ended up tied with 15-3 records and were seeded with a coin flip.

In games on Saturday, Maurice Martin scored 23 points to pace St. Joe's over Rutgers, 73-60. The Hawks trailed 44-43 with 9:23 remaining, but Martin (18 points in the second half) then took over with seven points in a 15-4 spurt that gave St. Joe's the win. Rutgers had lost 11 straight.

Also, West Virginia rolled to a 92-76 win over Rhode Island behind Holman Harley's 19 and Wayne Yearwood's 18. Sophomore point guard Carleton Owens led the Rams with 27.

UMass sputters again, 63-54

Sutton's 24 can't stop Duquesne

Compiled from staff and wire reports

PITTSBURGH—Senior forward Dwayne Rawls scored 24 points and grabbed a career-high 17 rebounds to lead Duquesne University to a 63-54 victory over the University of Massachusetts on Saturday.

In the final regular-season game for both teams, Rawls dominated the middle. The 6-6 power foward missed the first UMass-Duquesne game (won by UMass, 69-60) with an injured toe, but made up for it with a great effort on Saturday.

The Minutemen, who finish at 9-18 overall and 6-12 in the Atlantic 10 Conference, were led by sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton with 24. For the third straight game, Sutton was the only UMass player to score in double figures.

UMass struggled again offensively, shooting 35 percent from the floor at 23-of-64. Sutton hit almost half of those shots on 11-of-24 shooting. The Dukes were a little better at 21-of-53 (39 percent).

The first half saw UMass come away with a 25-24 lead thanks to 10 Sutton points. The Minutemen led throughout the entire period with the exception of a short-lived 24-23 Duquesne advantage in the final minute that Sutton erased with two free throws with 28 seconds left.

Rawls also had a strong half, scoring 12 points and getting 12 rebounds. Both team's shot horribly with UMass going nine-of-24 and Duquesne nine-of-31, a combined 32 percent.

The Minutemen, as is their custom, then lost the game in the opening minutes of the second half.

Allowing Duquesne to go on an 8-0 run, the Minutemen fell behind 32-25 and never got closer than five, 40-35 with 10:25 to go on a Sutton drive.

With Rawls contolling the boards the Dukes quickly took control and ran their record to 14-13 on the season. In the game's final minutes, Duquesne missed some foul shots, but the Minutemen were unable to take advantage and bring the game within range.

The Dukes had balanced scoring as senior guard Rick Suder contributed 12 before taking a curtain call at his final home game. Center Jim Balog added 10

UM opens at home Tuesday

The University of Massachusetts will open the Atlantic 10 playoffs at home on Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. against Rutgers University.

The Minutemen, at 6-12 in the conference, finished in seventh place putting them into first-round play. Rutgers finished 10th at 2-16. The winner of the UM-Rutgers game will play at second-place West Virginia on Thursday night.

UM is 1-1 against Rutgers this season with botn teams winning at home. The Minutemen were 60-50 winners at the Cage.

Being that the game is an Atlantic 10 playoff contest, admission must be charged. Ticket prices are $2 for students with an ID card and $5 for the general public. This is the definte last home basketball game of the semester and the team is looking for support, so head to the Cage on Tuesday night.

UM gymnastic teams split

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's gymnastics teams came out of this weekend's action with the Minutemen taking two out-of-three in their tri-meet at Temple with the Minutewomen losing a tough one to Southern Connecticut.

The final score of the women's meet was 173.25-170.25, with the Minutwomen falling just short of the tough 13-0 Southern Connecticut team.

Owl head coach, Pat Panichias was pleased with the outcome of the meet. "It was a tough meet," she said after her teams narrow victory, "UMass has a tough team, but we had an exceptional performance on the beam which pretty much decided the meet."

The 42.9 that the Owls scored on the beam, the third out of four events, was their team's high score for the season.

Although the Minutewomen (3-5) were consistent pretty much throughout the meet, they had trouble at the uneven bars where they only scored a 40.04. The Minutewomen have been without top uneven bar prospect Susan Zecher, and it's beginning to show.

Zecher, a freshman, has been out the entire season with a knee injury

Minutewomen snap streak; host Colonials

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team snapped a six game losing streak as, the Minutewomen, led by senior forward Karen Damminger, came from behind in the second half to edge Duquesne University, 65-62, in Pittsburgh on Saturday.

Damminger led UMass in scoring with 14 points and five rebounds. Senior forward Barbara Hebel added 11 ppoints and six rebounds, and senior captain Jerrie Bernier, freshman guard Christel Zullo, and freshman forward Beth Wilbor all added 10 points for the Minutewomen.

The Duchesses were paced by Becky Oglivie's game-high 20 points. Tanya Larrydale also added 12 points for Duquesne, 6-15 overall and 2-12 in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutewomen, 10-16 overall and 3-12 in the conference, also snapped an 11 game conference losing streak, with their last A-10 victory coming on Jan. 9 against Duquesne. UMass shot 45 percent from the floor and 73 percent from the line. The Duchesses connected on 48 percent of their attempts from the field.

With this victory, UMass has all but secured eighth place in the conference standings. A win tonight over George Washington University will solidify the A-10 tournament picture for the Minutewomen. Tonight's game is the regular season and home finale for the Minutewomen, before leaving for the tournament at West Virginia.

As it stands now, UMass will end up facing Duquesne again in the first round of the tourney. The winner of that game will get to face the number one seed in the tourney, Rutgers University. The Lady Knights are undefeated in the A-10 and are currently ranked eighth in the nation.

The task at hand is to try to get some momentum going into the tournament. The Minutewomen dropped a 61-46 decision to GW on Feb. 11. Damminger and Hebel led UMass in that game, both scoring 11 points and Bernier hauled in a game-high eight rebounds. Kelly Balentine led the Colonial women with 15 points. A win tonight could give the Minutewomen an added boost going into the first round of the tourney.

Minutewoman Mischief: Bernier hauled down her 468th career rebound against Duquesne, putting her fifth on the all-time UM rebounding list. . .Zullo now has tallied 128 assists and 48 steals so far this season. She probably won't break the season assist record (149 set in the 1978-79 season by Mary Hallaren), but is currently third on that list. Zullo is also third on the season theft list. . .Hebel is leading the team in scoring this season, averaging 13.1 points per game overall and 14.7 ppg in conference games. She also leads the team in free throw shooting at 84 percent overall and 93 percent in conference games. Senior guard Juanita Matthews is second averaging 10.4 ppg. She is second in free throw shooting, making good on 74 percent of her attempts. . .Damminger is the team's leading active rebounder with 5.6 caroms per game. Sophomore center Sue Burtoft, out of the lineup with a broken finger, still leads the team in rebounding with 7.4 boards per game. .Wilbor leads the team in shooting percentage, connecting on 58 percent of floor attempts. She also scored a career-high 16 points against West Virginia University last Thursday. Damminger is second, shooting 55 percent from the field.

Hearings to determine eligibility

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Hearings to determine who can vote in the impending University professional staff union election began yesterday, and a representative from one union said a date for the election might be set this week.

Representatives from the two unions vying to represent UMass professional staff, the Office and Professional Employees International Union (OPEIU) and the Union of Professional Employees/Massachusetts Teacher Association (UPE/MTA), are meeting with campus administrators and the Massachusetts Labor Commission in Boston this week to figure out who will be eligible to vote.

The commission must decide who is eligible to vote before a date can be set for the election.

"Hammering out eligibility job title by job title will be a slow process," said Dale Melcher, a woman's studies staff assistant and MTA delegate.

"Professional staff members come in such a variety," she said. "It'll be quite a battle to determine where you draw the line."

Jerry Ashlock, a representative of OPIEU, said the administration can request that certain job titles be excluded from voting under the condition that they are privy to managerial or confidential material.

Ashlock said bugetary implications were a major factor in OPIEU's initiating the union drive.

"We're getting close to budget time now," he said. "We (the University) didn't receive a bare bones budget but it's not what we wanted. Given the budget constraints, if you don't have collective bargaining, you don't have a legally binding contract.

"The professional staff needs to protect itself with a legally binding system — a system that every other group on campus has," he said.

Ahslock said he hoped the labor commission would set an election date this week. Both unions say they want the voting to take place by the end of the spring semester.

Melcher said the Olney study, a controversial wage classification system implemented in July, was "symptomatic of the irrationality of personnel practices."

The study reclassified professional staff positions, set new wage caps, and angered many professionals who said it diminished employees' supervisory status and provided an unsatisfactory grievance procedure.

"The grievance policy is a critical point," she said. "The last step for grievances (under Olney) is the chancellor's office — hardly a neutral party."

Students: 'Divest, divest...'

Sit-in at Smith enters second day

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — As administrators stepped over legs and between bodies yesterday morning, a group of Smith College students began a sit-in outside Smith President Mary M. Dunn's office, to protest the college's South African divestment policies.

At 9 a.m., about 35 students gathered in College Hall and sat on stairs and the floor, doing hon ework, discussing strategy and chanting slogans that included, "Divest, divest, we can't afford to do anything less."

By mid-afternon, the protest swelled to more than 60 students and most said they expected to spend the night in the building. Several professors brought their students to the sit-in and taught their classes there.

Local peace activist Frances Crowe was expected to lead a teach-in on civil disobedience at the sit-in site at 8 p.m. last night. Protesters said they plan to take civil disobedience action today, thoj gh they did not specify what action.

The sit-in was prompted by an announcement Saturday by Smith's Board of Trustees that it would divest only $1.75 million from a current endowment of $22.3 million invested in companies that conduct business in South Africa.

"I think right now we need to express to the administration and to the trustees that the students want a total divestment, and we're not pleased with their decision, and today is the beginning of an all-out commitment to have them come back and make a new decision, said junior government major Kelly Gerald.

The student-faculty Ethical Investment Committee has called for complete divestment over a two-year period.

The sit-in will go around the clock and "if it comes to being arrested, then we're ready for that. There are many of us here who are committed to being arrested," said Gerald, who is chairwoman of the Investment Committee, a separate 10-member student group that has been studying Smith's investment policies.

In a written statement, Dunn said she was "pleased that Smith students are so deply engaged in working for the people of South Africa." She also expressed "hopes that they will, in the near future, help her develop a criteria and evidence to be used in divestment decisions in June 1987."

At about 3 p.m., Dunn addressed the demonstrators, saying, "It was her motivation to discuss with the trustees more definitive rules about divestment," according to Gerald.

Dunn was not opposed to students staying overnight as long as one student was assigned to allow people in and out of the building, because the doors would be locked, said Mary Callahan, news director in the public relations office.

"She will be available whenever (students) want to say anything to her," Callahan said.

"I'm here because I support the concern that the students have," said economics professor Tom Riddell, who attended the sit-in in between classes. "I'm upset that the trustees did not decide to divest...I think there is room for movement."

"I think a lot of students feel that economics and morality are two different things, and if you put one above the other, then we're coming off as people who put human lives on a lower scale than financial gain," Gerald said. "The college is not a profit-making institution and we're not going to be destroyed by divestment."

Women describe feeling like work place 'imposters'

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Beth, a Certified Public Accountant, earned the highest score on the Board exams in Massachusetts. She discounted her achievement by saying "It's a small state."

Laurie tried out for the basketball team in high school. When she did not make it, her parents consoled her. When her brother did not make the boy's team, they told him if he really wanted to play basketball, he should practice hard and try out next year.

She failed her third grade math test. Her mother told her, "That's okay, girls aren't supposed to know how to do math anyway."

These are some of the experiences offered by 35 women who attended a workshop Friday in Northhampton called "Imposters, Fakes, and Frauds."

Many women in the workplace frequently experience feelings of self-doubt, insecurity, and incompetentcy working in a job that they are overqualified for. This is known as "Imposter Syndrome," said Valerie Young, a well-known researcher on this syndrome with a Ph.D. from the University of Massachusetts.

"Women ought to feel like fakes because they do not have a history of belonging in the workforce, said Young.

"Women are fakes who feel as though they have slipped undetected through the system and it's only a matter of time before they are found out," she said.

Women fear success and failure in their jobs so frequently that they often do not take credit for their accomplishments.

"Success often mean isolation and abandonment," Young said.

Women also tend to capitalize on their failures and forget their accomplishments. They also take failure more personally than men do.

To combat the "Imposter Syndrome" women aree told to learn to set realistic goals for themselves, to accept compliments, and to list their accomplishments so they have something to look back on.

They are also told to look for the real imposters

"Even though the ERA didn't pass, many women went out as lobbyists and talked to male representatives. The mystique was broken. They said if he can do it so can I," and many went out and ran for political office, Young said.

Many girls are still being told that somebody, whether it be their fathers or their husbands, will take care of them, Young said.

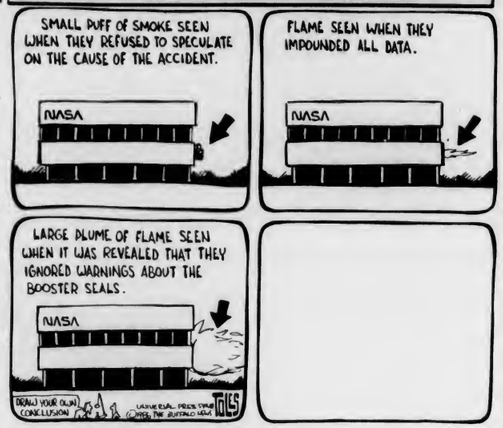
Escape changes nothing

Rusty Denton

For a long time now, I've been trying to figure out the three-ring circus of divestment politics. No one I've talked to quite seems to know the exact effect divestment will have on apartheid, but most think that it will apply some kind of pressure on the South African administration. In my book, that's a pretty fuzzy-minded approach to politics.

Try as I might, I can't figure out how it is going to help blacks in South Africa if people of conscience sell their stocks and forfeit their influence as stockholders in South African interests. In the first place, if people of conscience sell, then people without conscience will buy. In the second place, a corporation can't be forced to get out of South African commerce unless the majority stockholders insist on it. And thirdly, even if all U.S. business is cut off from South African contracts, the people who hurt the most are not going to be the wealthy whites; they are going to be the poor blacks who need the jobs desperately. Perhaps the Soviet Union or Japan would take over the contracts; how would that force an end to apartheid? Or perhaps nobody would take up the contracts, and jobless blacks would stage a bloody revolution; is a bloodbath really the solution caring people want? Somehow I doubt it.

It seems to me as though divesting is actually abandoning our social responsibilities to South African people of color. Investors are in a position to work for more jobs, better pay, more responsible positions, and higher education for black workers. They are in a position to win concessions from the government by making it worth their while business-wise to let black families live together and travel freely and work on an equal basis with American whites.



I do not see those against apartheid trying to win those in power to their side in any way. I see them trying to threaten those in power. The psychology is very crude; no one reacts positively to a threat. This really surprises me. The same people who idolize the non-violence of Martin Luther King support a violent black uprising for South Africa. The same ones who talk about "American imperialism" and bullying have no qualms about trying to bully and brow-beat the Botha administration with American influence.

Perhaps they need to take a page from King's book. His response to injustice was not to abandon the system. His response as nearly as I can tell was to get involved with the system, to get other people involved with the system, and to inspire them to involve still more people with the system, and all of them peacefully. King knew that violence begets violence, and escape changes nothing.

I know of a community down in Mississippi that was once quite poor. The townspeople were white and middle-class, and the rural people were black and poor, and racism was the rule. One man, a black, decided to do something about it, and recruited others, black and white, from other parts of the country to get involved. They started with the needs of the people, and after one was met, would deal with what the black community felt was the next big need. Over time, they educated the black children, built stores in the formerly all-white town, built a rural medical center, built affordable housing, and all the time used local labor to do everything so that the people would acquire self-respect and a decent living. The man who started this was a pastor, and today his parish is the most beloved church in those parts.

Today, caring Americans have the opportunity to do the same thing through corporate and individual involvement in black South Africa, and to change the apartheid system, as well as winning the eternal friendship of an oppressed people. I really hope we won't take the easy way out by trying to escape from responsibility for their condition.

A bad day in the nursery

Bill Cole

Miss Dratch was in a bad mood today. Her favorite roller derby team had lost last night and she was wielding her switch with a wrath that was unusual even for her. The whole nursery was engulfed in an air of tension as everybody tried to keep from drawing her ire.

"Runny-nose" Bromery was doing laps around the playroom on his Tonka dump truck with power lift gate, when little Jenny Simpson got up to get more finger-paints. Johnny Rudddock, noticing that runny-nose didn't see Jenny and was probably gonna run into her, dove in front of the speeding yellow truck. When the dust settled, Johnny was rolling on the floor in pain while Jenny gurgled her thanks to him for saving her from sure disaster. But runny-nose, boy he was hoppin' mad!

"Miss Dratch...Miss Dratch, look at the dent Johnny put in my Tonka dump truck with power lift gate, waaaaah!"

Miss Dratch's bloodshot eyes bulged a little as she raised high her switch. I couldn't bear to watch so I hitched a ride on the next wooden train headin' toward the other end of the nursery.

Where I got off, a crowd of 15 kids were making gimp while they ate gorp and drank flouridated water from nipple-bottles. They were watching as four toddlers in tie-dyed diapers argued with five others wearing blue oxford cloth diapers. These were the two competing gangs in our nursery: the "tie-dyed toddlers" and the "blue oxford babies."

"You put misleading finger-paintings up on our bulletin board!" charged one of the tie-dyed toddlers.

"Oh yeah, well your water-color paintings were misleading too, and you guys tore some of our finger-paintings down!" responded a blue oxford baby, sticking his tongue out emphatically.

It was at that point that one of the blue oxford babies stepped forth. In addition to his blue oxford socks and blue oxford shoes, he was wearing a blue oxford shirt with a button down collar. He wore his watch on the outside of his sleeve to keep the hairs from catching in the watchband, but we all knew he was light years away from puberty. His name was Lorraine Spivacuous. He was always actin' real macho; I think he had to cause he had a girl's name.

"I outta punch all you commie buggers right in the nose!" Lorraine said to the tie-dyed toddlers. "The problem with you radicals is that you all just hate America! I myself love America, and I think I'm gonna sing about it...America the beautiful..."

As Lorraine began singing in too loud a voice, the crowd broke up and headed for their respective nap-pads, like we always did when Lorraine starts singing. Miss Dratch, meanwhile, was heading this way to see where that awful din was coming from.

Letters

They must have done something

In regard to David Valade's and Jackson Katz's columns (Feb. 20), Harry Truman once said, "We must have done something right if we got all the crazies upset."

Tony Rudy

How can we comdemn protest?

Bravo to the Dartmouth students who are protesting the obscene system in South Africa known as apartheid and their college's investments there.

As Americans who often extol the marvels of social justice and compassion - in word if not always deed - how can we condemn student protest? We do it partly absolved by the climate of our time; one which deifies money and success - whether individual or national - while those rare individuals who display righteous indignation at the status quo are labelled "subversives, un-American, commie sympathizers."

How applicable to our current plight then are the words of the exiled South African poet Dennis Brutus, penned some 20 years ago: "The impregnation of our air/with militarism/is not a thing to be defined/or catalogued.../we become a bellicose people."

The brave dissenters at Dartmouth hearken back to a long-standing New England tradition: performing civil disobedience when, as Henry David Thoreau wrote in his famous essay on the subject (whose words inspired Gandhi incidentally):

"All men recognize the right of revolution; that is, the right to refuse allegiance to and to resist the government, when its tyranny or inefficiency are great or unendurable."

But alas, in concluding this passage - with words that howl with relevance today - Henry wrote, "But almost all say that such is not the case now." For indeed, to act on one's noblest beliefs is to risk abuse, anxiety and scorn; yet unless more Americans risk such behavior - in advocating peace and social justice and human solidarity - the prognosis for the nation is poor. Already there are far too many of us only too willing to play the accepted role of ostrich.

PIRG mandate: in your interest

Thank you to the many of you who came out and demonstrated your support for the MASSPIRG chapter here at UMass. Living in a democracy, many of us often take for granted the privilige of being able to organize and exercise our rights on issues that concern us. As students of the 80s, we are often referred to as being "apathetic," "selfish," and "money-minded." Though we doubt this is the case anywhere, we know it is not the case here at UMass.

MASSPIRG not only believes, but demonstrates, that actions speak louder than words. Since our establishment on the UMass/Amherst campus in 1972, we have won passage of a bottle bill, making into law the common sense act of recycling natural resources; we have said "no" to polluters who dump raw toxics into our water supplies by enacting a Pollution Penalties Law; through the new car Lemon Law, we have given consumers recourse [illegible] most recently we have made the first step in curbing the destruction of our lakes and forests through the enactment of an Acid Rain Law.

In supporting a PIRG, we make a statement about our role in society. We all want clean water, to be protected as consumers, to have enough to eat and to be represented effectively by our elected officials. By democratically deciding to pool our resources through a small fee, we are making an impact that no one of us could make alone. The PIRG transcends political boundaries and special interest agendas to dedicate ourselves to achieving these goals.

UMass students can take pride in the high voter turnout and the overwhelming support for PIRG at UMass. No matter what people say about students in the 80s, we at UMass care enough to make our voices heard on the issues that effect all of us.

Book Review

A Scattered People; An American Family Moves West by Gerald McFarland Pantheon Books 245 pp. $17.95

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

I have a confession to make. Deep down inside I am a frontier woman, one of those brave white people who "conquered the west." I believe all of Frederick Jackson Turner's stuff about the role of the frontier in the development of the American psyche. Maybe even more important than believing it is that I like it.

When I was in third grade I read all of the Laura Ingalls Wilder's books (remember Little House In the Big Woods, Little House on the Prairie, etc) at least three times. After that it was Caddie Woodlawn, The Oregon Trail, and many, many others.

I found a grown-up version of my favorite childhood genre in the form of A Scattered People; An American Family Moves West by University of Massachusetts history professor Gerald McFarland.

The book is a very well researched and detailed account of the 19th century migration of McFarland's ancestors across the American continent. Although all the incidents McFarland relates are factual -- he supports his narrative with photographs and documents and numerous other sources -- the story and the characters seem fictional, almost larger than life. The audacity of their actions is demonstrative of the youthful boldness of the new nation which they help to expand. The growth of McFarland's family over the five generations covered in A Scattered People parallels and reflects the growth of American territory and the expansion of American culture. The events which they witness add a vigorous flesh to the skeletal framework of America's historical development with which most of us are familiar. McFarland's painstaking study is fascinating: He combines a firm grounding in the history of the period with an understanding of the role of many social forces, such as religion and economics.

I recommend this book highly, for adventure and history buffs alike.

Costello fans: see the Pogues!

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The Pogues, an Irish band which plays traditional Celtic music, will play Wednesday March 5 at Northampton's Pearl Street, and a very special guest is slated to be in attendance.

The guest is English singer/songwriter Elvis Costello who is the Pogues producer and who is engaged to Cait O'Riordan, a vocalist and the band's bassist. Since Costello played a few numbers with the band on performances in England, the manager of Pearl Street who talked to the Pogues manager this week said the same situation may very well occur.

"The official story as I have it right now is that he [Costello] intends to come," said Jon Allen, an employee of Pearl Street. "If he does come, the probability of him playing is strong."

The bands record, released last year, Rum, Sodomy and the Lash, is their first US release and it features biting lyrics that could go over well in any smaller club, whether it be Dublin, London, or Northampton. The record's songs epitimize what live music was invented for, as lyrics describing the harsher effects of alcohol in "The sick bed of Cuchulainn," start the album at a fierce pace. Nine other songs, crammed with visions of long-past wars, legends, myths and society's more violent characteristics, dart out amidst the Uileann instrument, fiddles and various horns.

Five of the songs are originals from the brilliant songsmith and lead singer Shane MacGowan, with the remaining songs traditional arrangements designed perfectly for an audience with a Guinness Stout in hand.

"I'm a Man You Don't Meet Every Day," a traditional arrangement, features Costello's fiancee Cait O'Riordan on lead vocal. O'Riordan's voice balances well the raspy sound of MacGowan, who is lead vocalist on most of the record's songs.

The Pogues are designed for a club-setting such as Pearl Street, which has a 600-seat capacity. Unfortunately, proper ID is required and you must be 21 or older to attend. Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center or at Pearl Street ticket office at 10 Pearl Street in Northampton with a 2:05.96. Kris henson was 13th.

Other results: Kelly Henson was seventh in the 100 butterfly with a 1:02.59. Carroll was ninth and Nancy Stephens 14th. Kris Henson was 10th in the 500 with Margaret Cameron taking 15th.

Michelle Leary also had an outstanding meet, shattering the school record by almost eight seconds in the 400 individual medley with a 4:47.70. She was ninth with Uzzo taking fifth with a 4:53.90, a slower time but a higher place because she was in the championship finals. Cameron was 14th in that race.

Another record fell in the 800 free relay as Uzzo, Cameron, Kris Henson and Leary turned a 8:09.30. The 200 free relay team of Patty Pike, Megan McCamy, Leary and Freitas were fifth with a 1:44.42. Wilkins was fifth in the 100 back, Kris Henson was 12th in the 100 free with Leary taking 16th while Kris was eighth in the 1,650.

Wilkins took 11th in the 100 backstroke with Reginia Jungbluth gatteing 11th in the 100 breaststroke. Cameron was 12th.

UMass was fifth after the first day, then moved to third and stayed there. Maine won with 777 points. Northeastern was second with 541 with UMass third at 386.

Rutgers at UMass

RON GERLUFSEN

The Records: UMass is 6-12 in the Atlantic 10, 9-18 overall. Rutgers is 2-16 and 7-20.

The Season Series: Rutgers leads 20-7.

This Year: UMass lost at Rutgers 63-72 and won at home, 60-50.

Streaks: UMass has lost four straight, last beating Rutgers on February 13. Rutgers has lost 11 straight, last beating Rhode Island on January 18.

Coaches: UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen is 1-4 against Rutgers, 1-1 against Rutgers coach Craig Littlepage. Littlepage is 1-1 against UMass and Gerlufsen.

Top Players: UMass - Lorenzo Sutton (6-2, G) is a one-man show, scoring 18.3 points-per-game. David Brown (6-4, F) scores 9.2 and gets 5.1 rebounds. Rutgers - Eric Riggins (6-8, F) scores 16.4 ppg and gets 5.5 rebounds. Lloyd Moore (6-9, C) averages five rebounds and can be a threat underneath.

scored 18.3 ppg with gimmick defenses on him every night because he's the only UM player to average double figures this season. He's also a tough defender and good passer. Rodney Blake this big (6-8, 250) sophomore is the best center in the league. Controlling the boards with seven boards a game, Blake also scored 14 ppg and blocks almost four shots a game. Finally, Ed Coe of Temple is a consistent senior guard that scores 16 ppg, plays tight defense and generally sets the tempo for the Owls.

Second team: St. Bonaventure's Barry Mungar, Temple's Nate Blackwell, Duquesne foward Dwayne Rawls, Duquesne's fine-shooting guard Rick Suder and West Virginia's cocky-but talented Holman Harley.

All-Rookie Team: Not many good rookie's played in the league this season, but Massachusetts' David Brown was among the best. Scoring about 10 ppg and getting five rebounds, Brown played like a upperclassman. West Virginia's Darryl Prue is also tough. Georgetown (his originial destination before lousy grades kept him out) probably couldn't of used him, but coach Gale Catlett liked his rebounding. John Evans of URI worked into the starting lineup and can score with the best. I'll only select three, but Sam Graham of St. Bonaventure, Brian Shanahan of Duquesne, Tom Hovasse of Penn State and Anthony Duckett of Rutgers also played well at times.

Coach of the Year: St. Joe's leader Jim Boyle doesn't get enough credit for the fine job he's done, but he blended the Hawks into a consistent winner. A nod also to first-year George Washington coach John Kuester who took a disorganized program suffering from the Gerry Gimelstob reign of terror and turned them into a 12-15 team despite only marginal talent and no center.

Disappointment of the Season: Rutgers wins this dubious honor. Picked for sixth pre-season and returning two solid players in Eric Riggins and Lloyd Moore, the Scarlet Knights folded like a cheap tent and were mere a stepping-stone for most teams.

Team of the Future: Maybe my bias is brightly shining through, but Massachusetts will be a contender next season. The Minutemen started three freshmen and sophomore, lose only one player and have the renewed support of the university, they hope. A stronger non-league schedule is needed to improve, but UM should be in the top four next season.

The Gloria Steinem Award: Goes to the league office for their seemingly forgetting the women's league. With Rutgers, Penn State and St. Joseph's among the nation's top teams, the A-10 is one of the premier women's leagues, but like most conference's, the women are treated like second-class citizens.

Committment Award: Former league commissioner Charlie Theokas talked a big game when he started last season and actually did a nice job of promoting the league against the likes of the Big East, but when the Temple athletic director's job came up, Charlie bolted for the easy chair behind the big desk and a minimum of work. Thanks for the memories Charlie.

Officials of the Year: In the Massachusetts-Duquesne game at the Springfield Civic Center, the refs, unable to make up their minds, called double fouls twice when players collided. Double fouls are usually reserved for fights, but in when in doubt the refs used them to hide their ineptness.

Women roll past GW, 67-57

Seniors star in final home game

By ROB ROSE AND ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

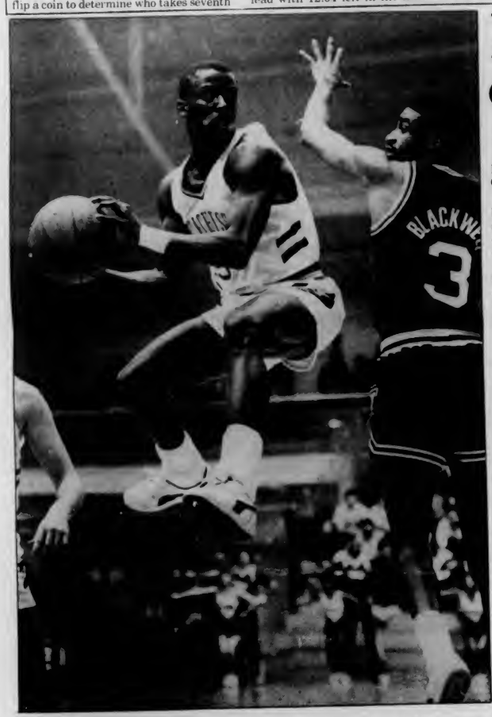
The five seniors on the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team were honored in a pre-game ceremony by head coach Barbara Stevens last night for their contributions to the program. They returned the favor, sparking the Minutewomen to a 67-57 victory over George Washington at the Curry Hicks Cage.

The win put UMass at 4-12 in the Atlantic 10. Should George Washington (4-11 in the league) lose to 13th-ranked Penn State at College Park on Saturday, the Minutewomen and the Colonials would flip a coin to determine who takes seventh place and avoids a first-round game in the A-10 post-season tournament starting March 5.

Last night's win put UMass in the position to avoid a possible second-round game with eighth-ranked Rutgers(24-2 and 15-0 in the conference). Should UMass finish seventh, they would face St. Joseph's in second-round action.

Senior guard Juanita Matthews scored 19 points to lead a balanced UMass attack. Senior forward Karen Damminger added 16 points, including a follow of a Matthews miss that gave UMass a 10-9 lead with 12:04 left in the half. UMass never trailed again.

Damminger also grabbed 18 rebounds, six of them offensive as UMass scored several easy second-chance hoops.



Freshman forward Beth Wilbor contributed 12 points off the UMass bench. Senior guard Barbara Hebel had 11 points along with seven assists. Senior forward Jerrie Bernier had six points and four rebounds. GW was led by Gloria Murphy with 20 points and 10 rebounds.

"It was a great way for the Seniors to end their career," said UM coach Barbara Stevens. "They all contributed, they all were tough in the clutch. They went out shining."

After taking their initial lead, the Minutewomen went on an 8-0 run sparked by six Damminger points to build their lead to 22-13 and force Colonial coach Denise Fiore to go for the time out.

GW responded with a 7-0 run of their own, led by Murphy's five points, to cut the lead to 22-20 with 4:07 left. UM led at halftime, 30-26.

The Minutewomen expanded their lead with an 8-2 run led by Wilbor's four points that gave them a 38-30 lead with 15:01 left. GW closed no closer than three, 46-43, with 9:04 left. UM traded baskets with GW until Damminger helped to ice the game with six free throws in the final 1:27.

Minutemen open playoffs

Title chase starts with Rutgers

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts basketball for all the problems it has had this season, stands four games away from one of college basketball's biggest accomplishments.

The Minutemen, despite a 9-18 record, can qualify for the NCAA tournament with a victory in the Atlantic 10 tournament. Starting at 7:30 tonight in the Curry Hicks Cage against Rutgers, the Minutemen begin their quest.

Unrealistic? Maybe. But UM head coach Ron Gerlufsen knows his team has the talent to beat any team in the conference, an ability they didn't have in past years.

Should the Minutmen defeat last-place Rutgers tonight, they will advance to a Thursday night quarterfinal contest at West Virginia.

"I can't say that we will go into West Virginia and beat them if we get the chance, but I do know that we are capable of doing that," said the coach.

"I honestly believe that if the players on our team get together and play as a unit, we are capable of beating anybody. Each individual has enough talent that if they all play up to their potential on the same night, then we can come away with a win. We're not looking past Rutgers, but I'd sure like another shot at West Virginia."

It's hard not to look past Rutgers. For a team from the state that produced a certain hungry-hearted singer, their basketball team doesn't seem born to run.

Losers of 11 straight games and holders of 2-16 record in the A-10 (7-20 overall), the Scarlet Knights have been stepping-stones for the rest of the conference this season.

Umass defeated them 60-50 when they last met back on Feb. 13. Since then, the Knights have, according to Gerlufsen, played with more intensity, but have yet to put together a winning effort.

The Knights were pressed into submission by UMass, committing 28 turnovers and having no players break double figures.

"We had good sucess pressing them," said Gerlufsen. "We also played pretty well on offense, but being that this is a tournament game, I don't expect we'll have as easy a time."

The Knights are led by 6-7 foward Eric Riggins, a sometimes starter that scores 17 points-per-game. Riggins scored a team-high seven when the teams last met at the Cage.

UMass has also had its troubles as of late, losing its last four as the offense has sputtered. Sweet-shooting sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton (18 ppg) has been the only UMass player in double figures the past three games, but Gerlufsen thinks he knows the reasons why.

"We're getting good sho s, we're just not hitting them," said the coach. "Against West Virginia we committed too many turnovers and didn't get the sho s, against Duquesne we got the shots but didn't hit them. I can't dwell on it at this point in the season. I know the kids can shoot, they just need to relax and let their offense flow."

"I really think that against Rutgers, with good fan suppol t, we'll do well and hopefully gain some momentum going into the rest of the tournament."

Minuteman Mutterings: Freshman foward Joe Fennell practiced with the team yesterday for the first time since January 18 when he was indefinitely suspended. He will in all probability not play in a game this season hoa ever, according to Gerlufsen. He was not reinstated last week as reported in another area newspaper.

A-10 Notebook

A look at the best and worst

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 Conference, like many of the teams it encompasses, make gains during the 1985-86 season.

The 10-team league went as most experts predicted it. St. Joseph's, Temple and West Virginia were the class of the league while St. Bonaventure, Duquesne and George Washington had their ups and downs, yet were capable of knocking off the top teams.

Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Penn State remained as teams with good potential, yet for a variety of reasons including youth, team problems and lack of support failed to climb into the upper half of the league. Rutgers, a school with a great hoop history, fell to the depths under new coach Craig Littlepage and with little doubt is in need of sweeping changes to compete again.

Your faithful correspondent followed the A-10 wars throughout the season and offers the following as a season recap.

The all-Atlantic 10 Team: The league had a number of individually outstanding players led by Maurice Martin of St. Joseph's. The 6-6 senior is of All-American caliber. He scored over 19 points-per-game and grabbed over five rebounds. He can singlehandly win a game, something no other player in the league can do. Dale Blaney, West Virginia's 6-4 senior guard is more than just a scorer. Hitting over 16 ppg, Blaney stabilizes WVU and is better defensively and off the boards. He's also a great leader.

Lorenzo Sutton UMass' 6-2 sophomore guard probably won't be picked because the Minutemen always go unnoticed by those who select all-star teams, but he

UMass records fall; Swimmers 3rd in NE

Proving just how far they've rebounded, the University of Massachusetts women's swim team broke seven school records and took third in the New England championships over the weekend.

Returning to Amherst on Monday afternoon after the long trip from the University of Maine-Orono, the Minutewomen are already looking foward to next season after their great effort.

"We swam incredibly well," said coach Bob Newcomb. "This was such a team in the true sense of the word. They really come together as a unit and proved much to themselves and others."

Headlining the UMass effort was freshman Melissa Waller, who broke three school records. Junior co-captain Allison Uzzo grabbed two school marks.

Waller was third in the 100 breaststroke with a school record 1:09.77. She was also third in the 200 breast, with a record 2:32.31. She teamed with Julie Wilkins, Lori Carroll and Sue Freitas to take third in the 200 medley relay while the team of Wilkins, Waller, Carroll and Kris Henson set a record in the 400 medley relay with a 4:12.70.

Uzzo set marks in the 1,650 freestyle with an 18:10.53 for sixth place and the 500 free with a 5:16.48, good enough for fifth. Uzzo was also seventh in the 200 free

Smith College students lock arms in unity as they block entrance to College Hall.

Students blockade

Smith sit-in enters third day

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON -- Smith College students created human blockades at five separate entrances to College Hall yesterday, preventing administrators from entering and bringing business in the building to a standstill, as protests continued over Smith's South Africa investment policies.

At 7 a.m., about 170 students placed themselves at the entrances, locked arms and informed those trying to enter the building that they were not allowing anyone in. They wore white arm bands to show they were willing to be arrested and red ribbons supporting the abolition of apartheid, South Africa's system of racial separation.

Today, students enter their third day of occupation of the building, which houses offices of the president and many other high-level college officials. The protesters say they intend to stay until their demands for total divestment are met.

Smith President Mary M. Dunn instructed 70 College Hall employees to go home and call back at noon to see if the students were still there. They were, so most administrators were given the day off, while a few carried out business in other buildings.

Dunn decided not to evict the students from College Hall yesterday and is taking the situation one day at a time, said Mary Callahan, news director at Smith's public relations office. Callahan added that Dunn was "very proud of the students for their committment to this cause."

Two dummies hung from trees outside the building adorned with signs that read, "Stocks or death" and "Murder." Students marched around campus, singing songs that included "We Shall Overcome." As happened Monday, several professors brought their classes to College Hall and taught them there.

Dunn and the dean of the college, Ann Burger, wanted to talk to the protesters. But the students "took a vote and decided as a group not to talk to them because they know exactly where we stand and there's nothing left to say," said a student who asked not to be identified.

"And where we stand is, we're not going to leave College Hall until the trustees accept our divestment policy," another student said. Protesters said there will be no communication with the administration until their proposal is seriously considered.

Three investment committees, composed of students and faculty, have called for complete divestment of $22.3 million the college has invested in companies doing business with South Africa. Smith trustees announced Saturday that they would divest only $1.75 million, causing an uproar among students and faculty, which led to the seizure College Hall.

At around 11:30 a.m. an unidentified woman in her 30s tried to enter the building but was stopped by a wall of students. The woman left when she was

Rape Task Force stresses education

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian staff

The Rape Task Force is known for the more visible aspect of its work -- advocating better lighting and more emergency phones on campus -- but that is not its only job.

A reduction in rape incidents will ultimately come from more education, according to the task force's members.

"If we lit the campus like a softball field it would still be no good," said Debbie Edelman, a member of the task force.

The task force consists of representatives from the Everywoman's Center, Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, the office of public safety, residential education, community relations, and the dean of students office.

Improved lighting and 10 emergency phones have been installed on campus since the task force was created in 1971, and as many as 50 phones may eventually be installed, according to Trey Williams, special assistant to the vice-chancellor for student affairs.

The Rape Task Force says this is not enough.

"Society has us believing that our only fear is men jumping out of bushes; 60 percent of women who are assaulted know their attackers," said Kathy Alexander of the Everywoman's Center.

The biggest problem, Williams agreed, is acquaintance rape. The task force feels that the best way to address acquaintance rape is to educate through different methods. This education falls under the headings of:

- Discipline, including punishment and measures to protect the victims
- Information, including a systematic distribution of information on sexual assault and how the University stands on this issue.

Some of these ideas have been implemented, and have been proved succesaful by the fact that more assaults have been reported, Williams said.

"The next step is to put ourselves out of business. As cheating isn't tolerated sexual aasault won't be either," he said.

Grad Senate misses quorum and Duffey

BY SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

For the second time in two weeks, a quorum of 75 graduate students was not met, forcing the Graduate Student Senate to delay a vote on a constitution change until the senate's general elections in May.

Senate officers announced that Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey was to address the general meeting, but Duffey did not show up.

The senate did, however, elect a new Executive Officer after it had been unable to do so because of two separate votes in which no candidate was able to secure a victory.

Gary Jakacky, a doctoral student in the School of Management, won the election to replace John Hayes, who resigned his position to run for senate vice-president.

Jakacky pledged to continue the senate's battle against the Authority Fee 'from the standpoint of a capital budget problem,' he said.

The senate battled the fee since it was first proposed on the grounds that it charged graduate students for buildings they do not use, such as dormitories and dining commons.

Information recently given to the senate shows that only 14 percent of the fee, (about $30), actually involves these buildings, however, so senate officers said they will oppose the fee less rigorously.

The senate also debated calling for a general audit of the University, due to alleged illegal management of trust fund interest by administrators.

The senate will request an audit of all trust funds, the interest on these funds and any other information it sees as directly concerning graduate students.

Senate president George Claxton reported that a meeting on the issue with Duffey yielded no results as Duffey said the issue should be presented to the Board of Trustees.

"A court is where this will probably end up."- George Claxton

Claxton said that the interest from trust funds was being used for, among other things, "morale functions at Whitmore and paying the parking tickets of the Chancellor's chauffer," Claxton said.

According to Claxton, a University attorney claims the use of the trust fund interest is legal, while 'several law firms we've talked to say they don't think so,' Claxton added.

Claxton said the senate would now address the trustees, but questioned solving the issue with them.

"A court of law is probably where this will end up," he said.

STORMING THE PALACE - Hundreds of Filipinos storm the Presidential Palace in Manila yesterday in celebration of former President Ferdinand Marcos' resignation.

Mrs. Aquino takes the helm; faces major reorganization

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) - The home where Benigno Aquino lived in exile and planned his fateful return to the Philippines was packed with joyful supporters after President Ferdinand Marcos resigned and Auino's widow, Corazon, took full control of the country.

Amid tears of relief and shouts of jubilation yesterday, some friends and relatives wore yellow, the color of Mrs. Aquino's campaign. A large photograph of the slain opposition leader was posted on the wall, along with posters from the recent political campaign. Champagne flowed. A mass was scheduled at St. Ignatius Church later Tuesday.

Ceferino Bague, a friend of the family wearing a T-shirt decorated with a picture of Aquino, said when he heard of Marcos resignatio, "I shouted. I got gooseflesh. I felt lightheaded. I feel like I am floating."

"Twenty years of frustration is over," he said. "The next step will be a complete reorganization. That's a big task for her, but she will be surrounded with good, loyal people."

Ttal Tuazon, another supporter of the Aquinos, appeared at the house wearing yellow.

"I called my sister this morning in the Philippines and she said, 'It's liberation day,'" she said. "I didn't expect things to turn out so fast. We've long been subjugated. It's a different feeling now. A few months ago I was scared and pessimistic. Now I'm optimistic."

Dr. Steve Agular, a family friend who is president of the Aquino Foundation, said "Since the death of Ninoy Benigno Aquino, we have been living in a climate of apprehension. "Now we can feel relief and happiness. Justice has finally triumphed."

"We were relieved that the changes happened without the bloodshed that we feared," he said. "She will be a president who will work things out from her heart, but using her mind too."

Aular said he and others in the opposition movement had always had faith in Mrs. Aquino, but worried in recent days that Marcos seemed determined to hang onto his power.

"As far as her strength and intelligence, I have never doubted them," he said. "But he was hanging tough. It seemed like he was ready to fight to the bitter end. It seemed like he had lost touch with reality."

Mrs. Aquino's victory "is just really amazing," he added, echoing the sentiments expressed by many at the celebration in Newton.

The new presidents niece, Alexandra Lichauco, a teacher in nearby Cambridge, said she was overwhelmed by the course of events in her homeland.

"I'm very happy, very excited and just excited about the whole thing," she said. "I just spoke with my parents in the Phillipines. They are celebrating. They describe it like New Years. Everyone is out in the street dancing.

"I won't say I'm suprised, since ever since the assasination, Mrs Aquino was pushed into the political world." Miss Lichauco said.

Marcos resigns amid Philippine jubilation

MANILA, Philippines (AP) - A defeated Ferdinand E. Marcos resigned as president of the Philippines yesterday, slipping away in the Manila night to a U.S. air base and touching off an explosion of joyous celebration among his countrymen.

"Cory! Cory!" Filipinos chanted in tribute to new President Corazon Aquino as they demonstrated by the thousands across the capital. A mob rampaged through Malacanang Palace, form which Marcos governed for 20 years.

"We are finally free," Mrs. Aquino declared on television. "...The long agony is over."

Marcos, who fled aboard American helicopters to the U.S. Air Force's nearby Clark Air Base, was brought down by a combination of a "people's power" uprising, military revolt and U.S. pressure.

First official word of his resignation came in Washington, where Secretary of State George Shultz said the toppled Philippine leader would be "welcome to come to the United States." But there was no immediate confirmation Marcos would go into foreign exile.

Gen. Fidel Ramos, the Philippines' new military chief, also announced the beleaguered Marcos' departure, saying he, his family and about 20 other people were airlifted by helicopter to Clark Air Base, 50 miles northwest of here, and a second group of about 80 palace associates traveled by boat and automobile to the U.S. Embassy grounds in Manila.

The Marcoses were spending the night at the air base and apparently planned to remain several days in the Philippines, possibly traveling to his home province, a senior U.S. administration source said in Washington.

Marcos' departure ended four days of uncertainty and political drama in Manila and 80 years of highly personal rule by Marcos over this impoverished archipelago nation of 52 million people, an important U.S. ally in the Far East.

Times were changing in the dorms . . .

First in a series: UMass of the 1960s and '70s remembered..

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

Women had an 11 p.m. curfew and coed housing was nonexistent in the early 1960s, but student life at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst was about to change dramatically, more closely representing the lifestyle students lead today.

William F. Field, dean of students since 1962, said his job was created to unite the student body, which had been divided completely by gender.

In a recent interview, Field recalled some of the changes in student lifestyles and living arrangements that transformed the campus during the 1960s.

"The world of the campus was divided into two sexes. There were certain dorms for men, certain dorms for women, and when you filled the women's dorms you couldn't admit any more women students," Field said.

"We had double standards for admissions, where women had to have much higher academic averages, because we had fewer dormitories for women, and since the rules said you couldn't live off campus if you were a woman, there was no way they could come," he said.

The University grew by over 10,000 students in the 1960s. "It was an exciting period," he said.

With the immense increase in admissions throughout the decade, the University set out to keep up with the influx of students, in what would be the building age of the Amherst campus.

UMass also sought to keep up with the times, becoming one of the first East Coast universities to introduce coed housing. "It caused us an awful publicity flop in Massachusetts," Field said, in part because of wildly enthusiastic student reaction.

"The first time we ever moved a group of women from the women's residence area, which was Northeast, into Brooks House, a dormitory on the men's side, it was just an absolutely earth-shattering thing," he said.

"We had nightly gatherings of 2,000 people screaming and yelling and running panty raids, and in general trying to encourage disruption and chaos ...

"The police and whatever administration we had would be out there trying to keep the men out of Brooks House."

In an effort to admit more women to the University, administrators sought to create dorms not designated by gender, so the buildings could house either sex.

"We removed the urinals from dormitories," Field said, "and as soon as we did that, they became unisex dorms."

Coed housing began after construction of the Southwest Residential Area was finished in 1966. The area was originally planned to house women, but because of the abundance of space, some towers were used exclusively by men.

"Eventually coed floors grew out of it," Field said. "It was not a matter of great planning."

"Remember the climate of the '60s," Field said. "We were growing dynamically. Who the heck wanted to be bothered with arguing with people about coed dormitories? It didn't bother us."

Budget calls for job cuts

New minimum wage cited as one cause

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Correspondent

The fiscal year 1987 Student Government Association Budget Act will be presented to the Undergraduate Student Senate tonight, and its main author said it contains deep cuts in student paid positions.

"The number of positions will be cut and the number of hours and weeks available will be cut for most positions," said Jordan Rosner, Undergraduate Student Senate Budget Committee chairman.

The cuts will affect positions funded by the Student Activities Trust Fund, which is raised by an annual $88 undergraduate fee. Rosner said the senate controls the disbursement of payroll funds to student organizations and these groups will now have less money to pay students.

The new Massachusetts law raising the state's mininum wage is a major reason for the cuts, Rosner said. Because students will be paid more per hour, he added, the senate can not afford to allocate more paid hours.

"It will do more to hurt on-campus employment than help it," Rosner said.

Mark Johnson, a budget committee member, said, "It's good people will make a little more money, but it means people will lose their jobs."

Rosner said the wage increase will start July 1, the first day of fiscal year 1987. He said the SGA budget represents a redefinition of his committee's priorities.

"The cuts are there not only because of the jump in the mininum wage, but because a decision was made [by the committee] to do speakers and concerts and activities first," Rosner said.

"We did what we felt was the best possible thing for students," Rosner said. "If we had the money, we'd keep the funding the same, but we don't."

Budget committee member Seth Kaplan said the committee had to make a tough decision. "Do we fund jobs, or do we fund pens, paper and supplies that these clubs absolutely need?," he said.

Barriers board reactivated

Renovations aid disabled

By JOE TIGAN
Collegian Staff

A board aiming to create a totally accessible campus for handicapped persons has been reactivated at the University of Massachusetts.

Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse has reactivated the Architectural Barriers Board, and said he hopes to "incorporate" the board with the Physical Plant.

The board's duties will be to review plans for all renovation projects with a view to "incorporating handicap-related modifications whenever plausible."

Raymond Bender, associate to the vice-chancellor and chairman of the barriers board, said there has to be much cooperation between the board and the Physical Plant. The Physical Plant receives requests from all areas of campus, then designs and plans possible renovations.

"We have to set up a very good liaison," Bender said.

"What we want to do is view renovation proposals while they are still in the design stage, instead of seeing them after construction has begun - when it's too late."

By working with the Physical Plant, some of the board members feel that accessibility for handicapped students could be achieved while renovations take place, Bender said.

"It would be more logical to incorporate accessibility with the requested renovation, as opposed to deciding whether an area is barrier-free for handicapped students after renovations have occurred," Bender said.

Like other board members, Bender stressed that such implementation would not necessarily increase the cost of renovation, and may even be economical.

"It should prove to be more economical if we could catch things in the design stage," said Paul Appleby of the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs.

Appleby, also a board member, said access on campus is "not too bad" at this point.

"But we've reached a plateau," he said. "The campus is reasonably accessible. The difference now is to address major problems," such as the installation of elevators.

According to Appleby, one of the major functions of the barriers board is to "screen" the construction or renovation on campus with Physical Plant officials.

"Most minor projects, like curb cuts and ramps for one and two step areas have been dealt with campus-wide," Appleby said. "The board would cooperate with the Physical Plant to prioritize projects and make recommendations to Vice-Chancellor DeNyse," he said.

According to Bender, a "transition plan" was undertaken in 1978. A task force was formed at UMass in order to identify buildings with no access or presented a barrier to students with physical disabilities.

"The idea of this plan was to reach an ultimate barrier-free campus," Bender said.

John Findley of Housing Services, however, said that all the goals of that transition plan have not been met, and that one of the goals of the Architectural Barriers Board is to do so.

The general theme of accessibility is that any space has to be usable by a person in a wheelchair, Findley said.

"(Bathroom) fixtures have to be at an appropriate height with certain graspability," Findley said. "There should also be enough room for clearance and turning needs; an elevator is a basic must and a more sophisticated fire alarm system is necessary," Findley said.

A proposed bylaw, which would establish a housing review board in Amherst, promises to be the subject of heated debate tonight at a special Town Meeting.

The board would "regulate or modify rent levels when it has determined the fair and reasonable net operating income" for landlords on a case-to-case basis, according to the warrant for the meeting, scheduled for 7:30 p.m. at Amherst Junior High School.

After last fall's Town Meeting, Amherst petitioned the state Legislature with an enabling act, obtaining the opportunity to create a Housing Review Board.

"The point of this bylaw is to provide some form of economic justice" for tenants, said Kenneth Mosakowski, chairman of last year's Rent Control Study Commission.

Several Town Meeting members have asked that the issue be postponed until the regular spring Town Meeting in May. Meeting member Diana Romer, who has written letters to the Daily Hampshire Gazette and Amherst Bulletin, explaining her position, said the bylaw is closer to rent control than meeting members had intended.

Town Meeting members "intended to provide a level of regulation just short of rent control" when they passed the enabling legislation, she said.

"The original proposal by the petitioners was farther from the bylaw than many of us had planned," Romer said.

According to Mosakowski, the only difference between the the petition and the bylaw is "rent levels" versus "rent increases," and "everything else that's in the recommendation has found its way into the enabling act."

Mosakowski said Romer is trying to eliminate the board.

"If you believe these people are sincere in their efforts to protect this bylaw, then I have a very old bridge I'd like to sell you," he said.

Romer, however, said she is not trying to kill the board, but to keep it from becoming like measures in Cambridge and Brookline that "work very badly."

"The issue of rent regulation has been decided. We accept that," she said.

HRTA career day held

The department of hotel, restaurant, and travel administration held its annual career day yesterday, giving students the opportunity to look into career plans.

"This was the most successful career day in terms of the numbers of participants," Claudia Silon, the event's public coordinator said. "The luncheon was the best ever."

Silon said she estimated between 800 and 1,000 students attended the career day, acquainting themselves with representatives from 36 companies.

"The companies were all from segments of the hospitality industry. There were fast food chains, hotel chains, [and] restaurants," Silon said.

Among the companies with representatives were the Sage Corporation, Marriot Hotels, Creative Gourmets Ltd. and Stouffers. An informal session was held in the Campus Center auditorium while the smaller rooms on the first level were used for slide shows and question and answer sessions.

HRTA was the first department in the country to offer a career day for students. In the 11 years since its start, the event has been totally planned and run by students, Silon said.

"For freshmen and sophomores, it's a good way to develop their career paths. For juniors and seniors, it's an opportunity to get their foot in the door," she said.

Evaluation guide wants an increased response

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide (CATE) will undergo changes this semester in an effort to improve the guide's credibility and the student response rate, the CATE coordinator said.

Past editions of the guide have been criticized for not having enough of a student response to be an accurate survey. According to coordinator Sally Phalon, "Most complaints concerned the low response rate. Often the only replies came from the extremes: the two people getting A's or the two getting F's."

The 12-year-old guide relies on students filling out evaluation forms on each of their classes, and returning the forms to the CATE office in the Student Union.

The 1984-85 edition, which called itself "one of the most opinionated documents you will ever read," received 8,500 responses from 1,500 students. Many courses received fewer than 10 responses.

"In the past, the method was to mail out five forms and to expect them to be filled out and mailed back. Unfortunately, it didn't work," Phalon said.

"Professors will take the forms to class to designate a student representative who will distribute and collect them. They will then be brought to us," she said.

Rather than offer listings for every course available, the next edition of the guide will select 1,000 courses with many sections and high enrollment, Phalen said.

The scarcity of funding has caused other changes in the CATE guide, according to Ellen Breslin, the Undergraduate Senate academic affairs coordinator.

"Rising printing costs have put a burden on our budget. We hope to hire a full-time advertising representative. The person will help bring in advertising revenue," Breslin said.

It costs $10,000 to print 20,000 copies of the guide, and advertising is expected to cover half that amount, Breslin said,

"We have the responsibility to tell students the facts. We felt that it is important to produce a credible book," she said.

The American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization, was to sponsor a rally yesterday at 5 p.m. outside College Hall in support of the occupation. Mount Holyoke College students have also come out in support of the cause.

Students have spent the last two nights sleeping on hardwood floors, planning strategy and waiting for the possible moment when police cars will pull up to College Hall and arrest them.

They say they are feeling "tired, good, proud, determined and confident that we're doing the right thing."

The rude awakening

Stephen Erickson

Jimmy awoke with a start, a billy club poking him in the ribs. Morning sunlight was streaming in the little room where he had been oversleeping. At first blurry, but then growing clearer, the picture of a police officer standing over Jimmy's bed came into focus.

"Good morning Jimmy," said the officer.

"Who are you?" inquired Jimmy, dazed and confused.

"Why I am one of Massachusetts' finest," replied the state trooper, "and son, you are in a lot of trouble."

"In trouble? What for? And how do you know my name?" asked Jimmy.

"We know a lot about you, and its a good thing we do, for your own sake," said the officer, ripping off pieces of paper from his pad and tossing them on the bed.

"What are these?" asked the awakening sleeper, peering over the covers.

"Citations," said the trooper. "Yesterday you were seen leaving your house without a hat or ear muffs in subfreezing weather."

"So what?" asked Jimmy incredulously.

"You were in violation of article 7723 of the Massachusetts criminal code for inadequate cranial insulation," the trooper said sternly. "Its a good thing you were spotted. By this time next week, you could have had a head cold or worse."

Jimmy opened his mouth to protest but the officer silenced him warning, "After what I've found here this morning, you're lucky I don't lock you up where you can't hurt yourself."

"You mean there's more?"

The officer drew a heavy sigh and replied, "I'm afraid so. On my way in, I happened to take a peek in your refrigerator. Jimmy, are you aware that there is not a single representative of the milk and dairy product food groups in there? Are you also aware that I almost tripped over that skateboard you left in the hall?"

Instead of answering the trooper's questions, Jimmy just sat up in bed, stunned, as the officer lectured on.

"There is no excuse for leaving things lying around or for not eating a balanced diet. Governor Dukakis runs all those cheery messages on television to remind you of the necessity of good health and safety habits, and obviously you are not paying attention. It's the law, Jimmy, Governor Dukakis is your friend. You know that, don't you Jimmy?"

"Yes sir," said Jimmy, "I even voted for him once."

"Don't talk about voting Jimmy. You know voting can be a treacherous business. That's why Governor Dukakis decided a few years ago that voting for another candidate, who might not really care about your safety, was just too dangerous a proposition, so he made democracy illegal."

Jimmy looked at the citations. One was for $80, another for $60 and a third for $12. "This is an awful lot of money I'm suppose to pay," complained Jimmy.

"Look son," said the officer, "you must learn to realize that this is all for your own good. Do you remember back in 1986 when your government passed the safety belt law?"

"Yea, I remember."

"Well," continued the officer, "we did that to make our roads safer, and in so doing we brought auto insurance rates down. The laws that you have violated today have lowered life and home insurance."

"But I don't have life insurance," interjected Jimmy.

"What?," said the startled trooper, "no life insurance? That'll be another $80. Everyone should have life insurance."

The state tooper strolled over to the window of Jimmy's bedroom and gazed out at the brilliant morning sunshine. "It's a beautiful day in the Commonwealth, but around every corner there are dangers. You can rest assured that we'll be there to take care of you," and with that said, the state tooper made his exit.

Now fully awake, Jimmy realized he had been sleeping too long.

Crusading toward failure

William Spain

People are rarely so pathetic as when involved in a crusade. It is bad enough if they are trying to spread their faith or quash what they consider perversion. When the target is a plant, it becomes even more laughable.The Reagan administration's war on marijuana is one such sorry sight, doubly so because it is doomed to failure.

At least it has provided us with a little drama. Who could forget last fall's stirring footage of Attorney General Edwin Meese mounted in a shiny helicopter as his faithful g-men swooped down on fields of the demon weed with fire and sword? I suppose it is important to keep his mind off his humiliation in the Senate las year but, really, I cannot help but think that there are more heinous criminals afoot in the land than a few of our agriculturally-oriented brothers and sisters. I know it is easier to uproot objectionable flora than it it is to play hardball with big crooks, but it accomplishes very little.

The campaign against cannabis is costing a great deal. The U.S. government will spend several hundred million dollars this year in a futile attempt to interdict and eradicate one of America's favorite recreational combustibles. Strange, we can no longer afford adequate funding for the enforcement of pollution laws but can subsidize a holy war against drugs. I guess they look at it as a matter of who your friends are. It is unlikely that many sinsemilla growers get invited to White House dinners.

It has been 49 years since the Marijuana Tax Stamp Act passed, virtually unopposed, through Congress. In spite of Draconian penalties for sale or possession and billions of dollars in enforcement, use has been steadily increasing. Only in the last few years has it begun to level off at (according to congressional estimates) 20 million regular tokers and another 40 million occasionals. Reefer is here to stay and the sooner this particular batch of bozos realizes that, the better for all of us. It is high time for Uncle Sam to stop spending money on drugs and start making it.

A Narcotics Intelligence study claims that some 9000 tons of marijuana is consumed annually in the United States. The House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control says that it is at least triple that amount but let us work with the more conservative figure.

Nine thousand tons breaks down into 18 million pounds or, more workable, 288 million ounces. At the reasonable tax rate of, say, $20.00 per ounce, that is a possible 5.8 billion dollars for the federal coffers each year. Just think of all the neat rockets and stuff Caspar could buy for that.

Aside from the huge tax benefits to be reaped, legalization and the inevitable regulation that would follow could do a lot to minimize the social damage related to illicit trafficking. A disturbingly high percentage of the ganja Americans puff on is controlled by organized crime. They are the ones who presently rake in the big bucks from its sale, not law-abiding citizens. By investing it in Senators and Congressmen, they further strengthen their position in our country and, thus, their ability to create general mayhem.

Efforts to rid ourselves of a weed as tenacious as crabgrass must be abandoned. Government officials, by their own admission are fighting an expensive and losing battle. The amusement to be derived from watching the Justice Department make itself look ridiculous is just not worth it. Cannabis has been enjoyed by humans for thousands of years and it creates few problems except where it is subject to legal prohibition.

William Spain is a Collegian columnist.

Where is the justice?

Yes, I am! But don't call me a loony or a basket case, call me mad, it's more profound. And besides, mad sounds a whole lot better to me.

So good a thing gone wrong. But was it? Blood on the snow -- I tossed the red razor onto the hood of his car. My heart left my chest and ended up in my wrist, thumping profusely. A second from a minute, a minute from a hour. What significance did it have at that moment in time? What difference does it make now?

The blood pumped from my wrist like a fountain so I decided to decorate his car. Too bad Christmas was a month gone by. The red droplets fell ever so softly on the frosted windshield.

I'm still alive, but perhaps it was because I rang her doorbell with a smile. He was much older, mid-twenties; he would call on my steady girlfiend, age 17. It was all done with sweet thought. They dated once more than three, or was it once more than four? Getting her drunk on cheap wine and trying to score her was his only concern. It didn't matter because he was "gorgeous," had bucks and a better car.

She continued to pledge her love to me. So convincing, so convincing, but her phone still rang. When I called, I received lies from her parents as to her whereabouts. How could they do that? Friends talked and I later found out about a 15-year-old girl, who he, on the basis of using his material collection, invaded infinite times. But there were other young teenagers. This adult also had a true girlfriend his own age -- a boot-scraper. They all tiptoed around her; even my girl knew of her presence. Just parking in the back of a local cemetery, behind all the cold tombstones; nobody ever goes there, huh? And a mortician he is by trade! Calmly I told her I loved her, I cared [illegible] was a fool. Probably because a fawn-eyed girl wasn't supposed to do those things. But eyes can deceive. My girl kept on whisper ing comforting words of love, cooing this reassurance like a songbird. So I blanked things out and accepted these words. When you're in love, you just don't quit banging your head into the wall, right?

My senses gleam now, like highly-polished chrome. I'm aware! But tell me, does love have to be at a certain age? Could I have been an exception? Never ever tell me, or any other person that they have to be a certain age. And do you know if you're in love, and if he or she is in love with you? Or are you only happy in your own world? I loved that girl but she ended up pledging lies, taking advantage; another wouldn't let the scars heal. I am never at a loss for words, only when I try describing what being in love means to me. However, now, I feel love is but a mere fallacy, twisted and grotesque, a love that burrows through my mind like a poisonous worm.

Just a kid, huh? "Just a screwed up 19-year-old punk." If this runs through your mind, and then I challenge you. Dump your emotions onto the table and I'll bury you with mine.

The flames burn quietly now, and the charred emotions lay glowing like hot coals. I know now that these problems aren't mine. With pride, I push them back into the direction in which they came. So, I ask you, where is the justice here? Why do people like this always seem to prosper? In my situation, those people all wanted to forget what I did. Nobody wants to know anything bad, never mind remembering. Why? Perhaps this is because it brings to reality what they really are and it interferes with the masks they wear.

Where am I? Right now I just pictured myself sitting on the hood of a '59 Chevy, sipping on a cold beer. I'm just thinking as I recline against the windshield. There's a girl out there for me. I know she's pretty and she's going to love me like I love her. I only wish I could tell her now. Very soon I will own this '59 Chevy. If you see it, remember this story.

Artist returns to haunt UMass with spectacular exhibit

People outside too...

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Tim Harney is back at UMass again! Only this time, the prodigal son has returned home to display his laurels since graduating. Harney's works on paper are the result of a recent burst of energy, since this rather large exhibit is all new work executed since last November. And they literally do burst with energy.

For those who remember Harney from his UMass days, these works attest that he continues to grow and progress. There has always been a resplendence in Harney's painting, but, in other times, his bright color was typically overshadowed by the dark and opaque, giving his work a sense of grief and foreboding. Evidently, it has been this dark pool of detachment that has gushed forth this fountain of war color and intimacy. No subdued tones here!

Timothy Harney, an ex-UMass Graduate student is exhibiting recent work at Hampden Gallery.

Not that we should interpret Harney's new painting as pure hope emerging from despair -- these immigrant and family scenes are depicted with the sad irony of the unfulfilled promise of their subjects. Despite the resplendent luminescence on the surface, sadness is what comes out of the works; form the somber "The Last Couple" to the bitter-sweet "The Sick Child," an ethereal sadness pervades the gallery, a sadness comprised of disjunction and imbued with feelings of nostalgia and anxiety, anticipation and mystery, dream and death.

Harney's work is compelling: we find ourselves fiercely drawn to the brilliant intensity of the form jutting across our horizon gradually revealed around us in the recognition of our surroundings as they become more and more light, and we realize that we are not alone. People outside too... closes Friday: see it. Only a small number of MFAs go on to become artists: Harney is one.

Hawn's new film fails to educate audience on feminism

Wildcats (★★)
Directed by Michael Ritchie
Starring Goldie Hawn

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

Wildcats tries to mix feminism and football with sexist humor and stereotypical characters. Director, Michael Ritchie and writer, Ezra Sacks, have constructed a preachy, moralistic tale that is only intermitently amusing. Without Hawn's bubbly, naive persona (which she has used in every one of her roles so far) this film would have been a total flop.

This film has absolutely no plot. " Hawn takes on the sexist male world" is about the closes anyone can come to a plot summation. The director and the writer have essentially made a movie for Hawn, hoping her name would be enough to attract audiences, ignoring all else. The characters are forgettable and the dialogue is essentially a series of self-righteous speeches with heartwarming sentimentality.

There are many speeches about sexism, which are entertaining when given by Hawn, but they fail to teach us more about her character, or even sexism; she is only giving us a lecture, not developing a character. For example, when she meets with the overtly sexist coach, Dan, to get a football coaching job, she gives him a speech. Later, she gives her creepy ex-husband a speech. Then there are a few "you think I can't do it cause I'm a woman" lectures to her football team. The sentiments are honorable, and prejudice is an ugly thing no matter what, but the speeches don't enhance the film. No character grows to learn that sexism is bad, Hawn just changes their minds for them.

Character development is a major problem in this film. There are only three types; bad, sexist men; good, feminist women; and men whose minds are changed by Hawn. Coach Dan is the main bad guy. He refers to Hawn as "babes" and then tells her that she is a joke as a football coach. Obviously, the coach is headed for a fall with such prejudiced views, and fall he does. In the end, he looses the big game, is humiliated by Hawn's team and then wallows in a puddle of mud, like a male chauvinist pig. Another one-dimensional character is Hawn's ex-husband, Frank. At first, Frank is sexist too, but a well-meaning sexist, unlike coach Dan. He only wants what's best for his daughter and ex-wife. He wants Hawn to quite her coaching job and the children to live with him. Eventually, Hawn changes his mind so that he ends up thinking of her as an equal.

Another flimsy character is the principal of Central High, Ben Edwards (Nipsey Russell). Russell's character has only one distinguishing trait: he says "Riiiiight" several thousand times during the film. Otherwise, Russell's character is quite forgettable. He acts bemused throughtout the awful antics of the cast yet he fails to be amusing. He always seems to be on the verge of saying something funny but never does. Maybe if he had had some funny lines from the writer, his character would have been amusing, but only Hawn gets the funny lines.

Though this film condems sexism, it uses sexist humor. For all the self-righteous speech making, there are a few scenes that protray women as gullible. For example, Hawn is giving a football player and some of his friends a ride to their mother's house. In reality, they are going to rob the house. Hawn doesn't realize this until she peeks in the window herself and notices that the room that they are trying to get into is filled with stereos, not a mother. Hawn plays stupid in a few other scenes as well, which seems to be the main problem with this film. It is unrealistic. The characters are unbelievable; the situations are silly an the sentiments against prejudice are neutralized by prejudiced humor. This film is only a star vehicle for Goldie Hawn.

Here's the Proof . . .

By STEFANIE SCHMALL
Collegian Correspondent

Their slogan is "Rock & Roll while you bowl" but on Friday night the emphasis at Cheers was definitely on rock and roll. The modest Northampton lounge featured a vibrant four-man band that call themselves The Proof.

Only two of the original band members remain. Drummer Greg Trelease and keyboardist Paul Raciot got together ten years ago forming the Morgan Flats. The group played mostly Frank Zappa and Steely Dan tunes. But with the emergence of disco they recognized the need for a new sound (and a new name). The public wanted to dance and 100 Proof was going to get them up on their feet.

The band eventually evolved into The Proof with the addition of lead guitarist Bob Chipolli and bass player Perry Amsellen. They've adopted a Top 40, R&B style and have succeeded in doing exactly what they set out to do -- they've got the crowds clapping, stomping and singing along with them.

Formed just this past January, the part-time Springfield band has already appeared in clubs throughout the W. Springfield, Greenfield and Waterbury areas. They've played at Cheers in Northampton (Pleasant Street) several times, always attracting an enthusiastic crowd.

Although most of their tunes are familiar ones, the band will occasionally throw in a few surprises. In addition to the original material they may mix into their sets, the band loves to improvise.

"We want to have a good time. In this band a sense of humor is prevalent," insists Trelease.

And a good time is exactly what was had by all Friday night as the band rocked the crowd with tunes like Springsteen's My Hometown, Otis Day's Shout and Day by Day from the Hooters.

The Proof played at Cheers in Northampton Friday night.

CALCIUM
★ is one of the minerals most likely to be deficient in the American diet
★ is important for bone, teeth and the proper functioning of every cell in the body
★ Adults require 3 or 4 servings of calcium rich foods every day.

If there is a LACK OF CALCIUM IN THE DIET it will be taken from the bones for its functions in the cells. If the diet is consistently short of calcium the bones may deteriorate causing a disease called OSTEOPOROSIS.

SOME GOOD SOURCES OF CALCIUM are skim milk, low fat yogurt, tofu, sardines, broccoli and kale.

FYI:

The commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Food and Agriculture, August Schumacher, will speak about the status of farming in Massachusetts at the ninth annual professional agriculture convention, from 2 to 5 p.m. today.

The convention, which is sponsored by the Stockbridge School of Agriculture at the University of Massachusetts, is being held in the Crmpus Center. "Why Agriculture" is the theme for the convention. It is open to the public.

A Stamp Out Hunger Day is being held today all over Massachusetts in order to raise money to stop hunger.

A table will be set up in the Campus Center Concourse where students can donate money and sign "Stamp Out Hunger" postcards, which are being collected nationwide and will be sent to the Subcommittee on Hunger in Washington, D.C. in the spring.

Massachusets Public Interest Research Group, (MassPIRG), which is sponsoring the event, will be holding food collection days, when students will accept food donations outside supermarkets to give to local soup kitchens and soup banks. For more information call MassPIRG at 545-0199.

SLINGING SNOW - President Reagan winds up to pitch a snowball, on his way to the Oval Office yesterday.

Langley commited

WORCESTER (AP) - A 23-year-old Clinton man accused of breaking in to the Planned Parenthood Clinic of Central Massachusetts and causing more than $5000 damage has been committed to the state's maximum security mental hospital.

Central District Judge Francis H. George ordered Joseph G. Lnagley held a Bridgewater State Hospital after reading a psychiaric report prepared by hospital staff who had been observing Langley.

The report was not make public.

Langley was found not criminally responsible for his actions by reason of mental illness, Assistant District Attorney Thomas A. Rosiello said after the proceeding Monday.

He was returned to Bridgewater State Hospital for 40 days of observation and examination and was expected back in court April 3 for a review, the judge said.

On Jan. 15 and again the following day, Langley was found in and near the sixth-floor offices of the clinic. He was arrested on Jan. 15 on charges of breaking and entering in the daytime with intent to commit a felony and malicious destruction of property.

Nigerian tapestries stolen

Nine Nigerian art tapestries valued at $825 and a slide projector valued at $150 were reported stolen at 1:10 p.m. Monday, from the Wheeler Art Gallery, University of Massachusetts police said.

In other police reports:

- Two female students reported at 1:30 p.m. Monday they had been receiving obscene phone calls for three weeks in John Quincy Adams Tower, police said.
- About $300 was reported stolen at 12:20 p.m. Monday from a room on the third floor of John Adams Tower.

Banks push for Venezuela debt restructure

BOSTON (AP) - Leading New York banks reportedly are putting pressure on regional banks to accept a plan to restructure $21 billion of Venezuela's national debt.

The Boston Globe yesterday quoted unnamed bankers and sources as saying that major New York banks such as Chase Manhattan and Manufacturers Hanover, which have very large outstanding Latin American loans, are exerting a strong verbal pressure on the regionals to go along with the agreement, but dozens of the smaller banks are refusing.

The unidentified regional bankers told the newspaper they did not believe enough moderate-sized banks had agreed to the deal for the agreement to be concluded today as Venezuelans and the New York bank had hoped.

The only New England banks with loans at risk in Venezuela are Bank of Boston and Bank of New England, whose exposure is smaller than that of New York banks but not insignificant, the Globe reported.

A New York public relations firm employed by the Venezuelan government said Monday that country's finance minister and central bank president plan to be in Manhattan Wednesday for a new conference announcing the deal.

UM stunned by Rutgers, 52-47

Season concludes with tournament loss

It wasn't supposed to end like this.

The University of Massachusetts had its season ended in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament last night at the Curry Hicks Cage, falling to last-place Rutgers, 52-47.

Only 930 fans paid the two bucks to see the Minutemen bow out ungracefully to a Rutgers team that had lost 11 in-a-row. The visitors, who advance to the quarterfinals Thursday night at West Virginia, stayed in their game plan while the Minutemen were drawn painfully out of theirs.

"We put ourselves in a hole by not shooting well. . .our foul shooting and in general our lack of killer instinct," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "What was publicly said about Rutgers being easy didn't help much, they're a good team and they played like one tonight."

Junior foward Eric Riggins led the Scarlet Knights, 8-20, with 21 points. Freshman Anthony Ducket added 11 as the Knights shot 19-of-38 from the field, holding their shots as the seconds ticked off UMass' season.

As always, sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton led UMass. Scoring 23 points, Sutton was the only Minuteman willing to put the ball up in critical situations. He was, for the fourth straight game, the only UM player in double figures. Freshman foward David Brown chipped in with six points and five rebounds, but the UMass offense was confused at best against the Rutgers zone.

The Knights' changing zones eliminated UM's inside game as starting center John Milum continued having problems, scoring just one point and taking just one shot from the floor in 11 minutes. Freshman foward Duane Chase managed five points in a decent effort as did reserve center Sean Mosby. But along with senior sub Tom Emerson (playing in his last home game as UM's only senior) the UMass frontcourt was ineffective in creating any offense under the hoop.

"You can't win too many games with one guy looking to fill the hole up," said Gerlufsen. "It's got to come from some other people. Tonight, it was our general offensive attitude going in. We're waiting for someone else to do it. When you see a zone defense and there are gaps in it, you have to be aggressive. It's basic things like that we didn't do. We were content to move the ball in the perimeter."

The coach however, shouldered some of the blame.

"I'll say one thing and it takes the heat off the players and puts it on myself, that after a full season of evaluating our players, I think that our basic goals in the zone offense will remain the same, but we have to go to a more motion type of offense. We didn't get any of the inside game we had last year. I thought a couple of the guys this year would be a little better at that type of play this year."

The Minutemen led briefly before Rutgers took the lead for good at 7-5 on a Riggins offensive-rebound and layup with 13:28 left in the first half.

The first half, like the last UMass-Rutgers game (a 60-50 UMass win) was a sloppy one. The Minutemen were a God-awful eight-of-27 from the floor (29 percent) while the Knights committed 12 turnovers. But at halftime, despite their lack of intensity, UMass trailed only by a field goal at 21-18.

The Knights, taking advantage of UMass' lack of desire on the boards, upped their lead to seven, then 10, 39-29 on a Ducket hoop with 9:11 left. UMass, missing several foul shot chances (they were 7-of-17 for the game) could not get any closer until an 8-0 run, sparked by six Sutton points, got UMass to within two, 42-40 as junior point guard Carl Smith buried a 15-footer with 3:25 to go.

But Smith fouled out just nine seconds later. Rutgers went back up by four, but Brown's 12-footer from the baseline made it two again, 44-42 with 1:39 to go. Three Rutgers foul shots gave the Knights a 47-42 lead. Sutton took charge, canning an 18-footer from the right to cut it to 47-43 with 51 seconds left.

Chase then intentionally fouled Ed Zucker with 49 seconds left. Zucker went down and Riggins came over to have a few words with the UM foward. Knight guard Steve Brown then flew over, pushed Chase and he responded with a shove of his own. UM freshman guard Mike Mundy then shoved Brown before running for cover behind the UM bench. The refs ejected Chase with a two shot technical, but Rutgers made only one of the four shots they received and led only 48-44.

Mosby hit a three-point play with 32 seconds left before Myles Dixon missed a one-and-one with Rutgers leading, 50-47. UMass had a chance at cutting it to two, but Brown and Mundy both missed in the final seconds. Riggins hit two foul shots with a second left.

"This hurts right now," said Sutton. "But we'll be back."

Minuteman Mutterings: Sutton missed 500 points on the season by just one. . .UMass is now 2-4 in the A-10 tourney.

"I'll tell you one thing, I'm getting ready for next year starting tomorrow." - Lorenzo Sutton

Minutemen looking ahead

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

A year from now, last night's 52-47 loss to Rutgers University before a miniscule home crowd at the Cage will serve as a painful reminder of the season that could have been for the University of Massachusetts basketball team. A year from now, all of the unlucky bounces, bad calls, and missed free throws will be nothing but a memory.

But, as disappointing as this season may have been for the Minutemen, it was also a season of bright indications for the future of this young team. Junior co-captain Carl Smith breaking the school single-season assist record, freshman Duane Chase's roof-shaking dunks, Lorenzo Sutton's sweet jumpers, David Brown's clutch rebounds; all of these memories of the 1985-86 season will put a smile on the faces of the Minutemen, their fans, and coach Ron Gerlufson.

Keep in mind that UMass graduates only one player, that being senior center Tom Emerson. All five starters return for the Minutemen next season along with key substitutes that have given UMass many a needed shot in the arm this past season.

"We are going to have a demanding attitude next season," Brown said. "The attitude now is already incredible. We're going to want to win some games next year. We will be a better team."

"I'll tell you one thing. I'm getting ready for next year starting tomorrow," Sutton, a sophomore guard, said.

Sutton, whose area-code jumpers lit up the scoreboard all season long, will have a lot to look forward to next season. This is a young Minuteman team, a team that showed flashes of how good they could be, will be in the years to come. UMass started three freshmen, a sophomore and a junior this season and looked to mostly freshmen for assistance off the bench.

Yes, inexperience hurt this team over the season. But the same situations the Minutemen may have panicked in this season will be the same situations UMass will convert into victories in the coming seasons. All that's needed now is patience and the desire to become a better team, a desire that's evident in the eyes of each and every member of this team.

A capsule of this rollercoaster season would reveal a few indications of possible good times for UMass. A narrow overtime loss to the University of Connecticut from the vaunted Big East conference way back in December and a thrilling comeback bid that fell just short against an already-established Temple squad showed that the Minutemen could play with the upper-crust teams in and out of the conference.

"I really learned a lot from this season," said Brown. "The college game is more up-tempo with things going on all of the time. I also learned that you can't look past anybody. We had a cloud over us tonight and it rained on our sunshine."

But behind those clouds that seemed to loom so large and black this season, there is a bright reminder of what to look for next season. The old "wait 'till next year" cliche fittingly applies to the 1985-86 version of the UMass Minutemen. But for this young group, maybe next year isn't so far away.

Dyslexics sue UMass over rules

By JOSEPH R. TIGAN
Collegian Staff

A group of students with dyslexia, a language learning disability, has filed a class action suit against the University of Massachusetts because they are required to complete four semesters of foreign language classes.

Charging that the University has violated federal regulations intended to help students with disabilities, the group hopes to have the foreign language requirement modified. The suit was filed in US District Court in Springfield.

"No consistent policy has been instated to accomodate these students," said Judith Herrell, graduate student adviser to the Dyslexic Student Organization at UMass.

Patrick Costello, president of the organization, said, "The DSO does not have any involvement in the case, but as an organization we do support the rights of dyslexics and learning-disabled students."

"We think they're doing the right thing," Herrell said. "Requiring people with a language learning disorder to take two years of a foreign language is such an obvious contradiction. It's just unfair."

The Federal Register of Rules and Regulations states that the University must "modify its academic requirements as are necessary to ensure that such requirements do not discriminate ... against a qualified handicapped student."

Herrell, however, said that while modification has been debated, no policy or waiver alternative for the foreign language requirement has been defined for dyslexic students.

According to Herrell, there has been recent research to show that language learning disorders in dyslexics have a neurological basis.

"If the structure in the left side of the brain is dyslexic, the right side must compensate for that," Herrell said. "The strength of the left side is in the language, writing and mathematics. All dyslexics have a language learning disability."

DSO, along with the Parent Advocacy Group, comprising parents of dyslexic students, listed some of the major grievances between dyslexic students and University administrators in a report issued this week.

"Aside from the problem of having no waiver alternative, students don't have any grievance process at all," Herrell said. "Committees reviewing the language requirement are ill-defined. The policy seems to be that all students take a foreign language."

Rent board is formed

Town Meeting awaits state approval

By NANCY KLINGENER
and JOSEPH R. TIGAN

The Amherst Town Meeting, in a 120 to 57 vote last night, passed a bylaw establishing a housing review board, contingent upon the state Attorney General approving within 90 days.

The board would review cases of landlord-tenant disputes, upon petition. Consisting of five members appointed by the town manager, it would conduct hearings within 30 days of receipt of the petition.

Meeting member Diana Romer sponsored a motion to refer the issue to a study committee, asking that the terms be changed, quantitative guidelines be set for "fair and reasonable income" for landlords, and new and sabbatical housing be excluded. The motion failed.

"There are some possible ill effects, as found in Cambridge and Brookline, for rent regulation, such as significant loss of tax income and the maldistribution of housing," Romer said.

Meeting member Nancy Gordon sponsored a motion to change references of "rent levels" to "rent increases," saying retroactive authority would overload and confuse the board's mission. It also failed.

"The object is to look to the future, not to go back to the past," she argued before the vote.

Changing the terms to "increases," would allow landlords to drastically raise rents before the board took effect, and nothing could be done, said Thomas Coish, staff attorney for the University of Massachusetts Legal Services Office.

If the Attorney General does not approve the bylaw within 90 days, the board of selectmen will petition the legislature to establish the board, under a special act.

The bylaw "should have no problem getting passed by the Attorney General," said Board of Selectmen Chairwoman Barbara Griffith. "It really is a sound bylaw as it is written."

The meeting also voted to authorize the purchase of three parcels of land on Main Street to build a new police station. Also passed was $2.75 million to pay for construction of the station.

Kerry and others laud Smith sit-in

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Some 200 Smith College students protesting the school's investments in South Africa have received statements of support from politicians and other public figures, including Sens. Edward M. Kennedy and John F. Kerry, as they enter their fourth day of occupying the main administration building.

Meanwhile, Smith President Mary M. Dunn called an all-college meeting at which about 2,000 students and faculty discussed the occupation. The audience applauded speakers on both sides of the issue, the only hissing occurring when a student called the protesters "self-righteous" and said, "These funds (the college's stocks in companies that do business with South Africa) are not owned by the students."

The Associated Press reported yesterday that six protesters said they were beginning a hunger strike, but this could not be confirmed by participants in the sit-in.

The students, who seized College Hall Monday, have received supportive messages from Kennedy and Kerry, both Massachusetts Democrats; Shirley Chisolm, a professor at Mount Holyoke College and former congresswoman from New York; and Gloria Steinem, feminist founder of Ms. magazine.

In her message, Steinem said she was proud that Smith College students are using civil disobedience to protest apartheid, South Africa's system of racial discrimination.

"The example of the Philippines gives us hope that a courageous people can triumph and that democracy, not dictators, are in the self-interest of the US," Steinem said, referring to this week's resignation of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his flight from that country.

Kerry's statement said, "The protest at Smith College shows the growing sense of outrage in this country and around the world. Racism and oppression must no longer be perpetuated with economic support from the US."

Dunn reported the results of a faculty meeting that was held earlier yesterday to discuss the college Board of Trustees decision that sparked the sit-in. Last Saturday the trustees announced they would divest only $1.75 million out of $22.3 million the college has invested in 23 companies with ties to South Africa.

She said the faculty "appreciated the progress the board had made but they nevertheless deplore the results."

Dunn rescinded an earlier plan that

Student senate debuts controversial 1987 budget

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Correspondent

Elimination of funding for campus political groups and deficit reduction are the highlights of the fiscal year 1987 Student Government Association budget presented to the Undergraduate Student Senate for approval last night.

Funding for 13 Registered Student Organizations was eliminated completely, while four new groups were provided funding in the proposal drawn up by the Senate Budget Committee. The FY 1987 budget, when approved, will take effect July 1 of this year.

"I think it's an excellent budget," said Jordan Rosner, chairman of the committee. "The priorities of the committee have been met. The groups that have nowhere else to go got funds. . .no one's getting hurt by this budget.'

Noting the elimination of money for political organizations, Rosner said, "It is our contention that these groups can survive on their own."

Mark Johnson, assistant committee chair, said, "We're not destroying these groups. We as a committe would like people to understand that there was no malicious intent. It was just a purely fiscal decision."

However, Johnson said that the preliminary reaction from the non-funded political groups has been "very negative." Neither Johnson nor Rosner would comment on which groups had protested.

Rosner distributed copies of the budget at 10 p.m. and announced a public forum on the budget scheduled between 6 and 8 p.m. Monday, March 3. The forum will be held to discuss any possible amendments to the funding plan, but Rosner said he doesn't anticipate many changes.

"I don't think it will be amended at all," Rosner said. "Remember, when you amend the budget, the money has to come from somewhere. You've got to take money from another group."

Initial senate reaction seemed highly favorable.

"It's a hell of a budget," said Shari Silkoff, a senator from Washington Tower.

Denise Forbes, a senator from Southwest, said, "It was a responsible and well put-together budget."

Included in the budget is an allocation of $50,000 into an account designed to eliminate a deficit in the Student Activities Trust Fund. University administrators say the deficit is at $120,000, a situation which spurred them to issue a Nov. 19 memorandum which outlined steps giving them more control in the student budgetary process.

The memo, written by Dennis Madson, vice-chancellor for student affairs, and Randy Donant, director of the student activity office, set guidelines for control of $1.5 million of the $1.75 million trust fund.

The groups whose funding was eliminated were: African Students Association, Chamber Choir, Chess Club, Chinese Student Club, Drum, Hunger Task Force, Korean Students Association, Lesbian Union, Peacemakers, Radical Student Union, Redemption Service, Republican Club and WMLASC (CASA).

Former Philippine president Ferdinand Marcos talks with Gen. Robert Bazley, commander of the Pacific Air Forces as he arrives in Hawaii yesterday.

Aquino's actions boost US support

WASHINGTON (AP) — Encouraged by Corazon Aquino's actions during her first 24 hours as president of the Philippines, congressional and administration officials yesterday predicted increased American aid to help her shores up the sagging economy and fight a communist-backed insurgency.

Mrs. Aquino faces enormous problems, but she appears to have taken office Tuesday with less turmoil and violence than the administration thought possible.

The relative ease of the transition, particularly the quick switch in allegiance of the military, will be advantageous in helping combat the communist insurgency, both Pentagon and State Department officials said.

"I think she established both through the election and in the events of the last week a very powerful position, and people underestimated that," said Michael Armacost, undersecretary of state.

The administration wants Mrs. Aquino to determine her aid needs before any is offered. But there is no doubts she wil get significantly more than Ferdinand Marcos would have received if he had managed to hang on as president.

Just before the Feb. 7 election, President Reagan promised to consider a significant increase in American aid if the election was fair and was followed by military, economic and political reforms.

That offer was put "in abeyance" after Marcos declared himself the winner in a fraudmarred election. But the offer is back oin the table for Mrs. Aquino's government, several officials indicated.

Rep. Robert G. Torricelli (D - N.J.), who last week won approval in a House subcommittee of a cut-off in all direct aid to the Marcos government, said in an interview that bill is now dead and he would favor more aid for Mrs. Aquino, although it's too early to say how much.

"I would hope that she would make an early visit to the United States to make a case for what is required," said Torricelli.

An early visit by Mrs. Aquino is unlikely, but it is considered quite possible that her running mate, Vice President Salvador Laurel, who is also the new prime minister, will come to Washington for talks.

Congress approved $245 million in aid for the Marcos government for fiscal 1986, and the administraiton is committed to requesting at least $220 million a year in combined military and economic aid under a five-year arrangement for use of the military bases at Clark Field and Subic Bay.

Philip Habib, President Reagan's special emissary, arrived in Manila yesterday saying he wanted to determine "how the United States can help in addressing the problems of economic revival and national security."

NASA says shuttle was approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key NASA official testified yesterday he did not know that Morton Thiokol engineers remained opposed to launching space shuttle Challenger even after their company gave its approval. He said he would have canceled the ill-fated liftoff if he had known.

"I believe that to suggest that flight safety was disregarded or not properly regarded on the night of Jan. 27, in my opinion, does a disservice to dedicated and committed professionals," said George Hardy, deputy director of NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center.

The testimony received by President Reagan's shuttle investigating commission clashed sharply with that of the day before when Morton Thiokol engineeers complained their opposition to launch was overruled by their company under pressure from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"All of us feel there's been a breakdown of sorts in the process," said chairman William Rogers, a former attorney general and secretary of state.

The panel focused on decisions by Thiokol managers and their NASA counterparts because it suspects a failure of the seal on the right booster rocked made by Thiokol led to the nation's worst space tragedy.

There was testimony that Morton Thiokol first opposed the launch, for fear that seals on the solid-fuel booster rockets would not work after a night of sub-freezing weather before launch. But the company reversed itself after a 10:30 p.m. caucus, despite continuing protests of its engineers.

During that caucus, Thiokol managers met without their engineers present and Vice President Joe C. Kilminster ultimately decided to sign a memo to NASA approving the launch.

Hardy and Lawrence B. Mulloy, NASA's booster rocket manager, strongly denied that they tried to force Morton Thiokol to give its approval for launch under risky, unprecedented-cold conditions. Challenger exploded 73 seconds after liftoff Jan. 28, killing its crew of seven.

"I did not detect any dissent when Thiokol came back with their final recommendation to launch," said Hardy. But he said had he detected the continued dissent, "I would not have accepted" the go-for-launch memo from Kilminster.

Tylenol blamed for Tennessee death

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tennessee health officials warned people not to use Tylenol capsules yesterday after discovering what appeared to be cyanide in the body of a dead man and in an Extra-Strength Tylenol capsule found in a bottle near his bed.

Manufacturer Johnson & Johnson earlier this month pulled the non-aspirin pain-reliever in capsules off store shelves after a New York woman died from taking an Extra-Strength Tylenol capsule filled with cyanide.

The FBI also said it was getting involved in the investigation if the death of Timothy R. Green, 32, whose body was found in his bed Sunday with a bottle of Extra-strength Tylenol next to it.

Campus was united against Vietnam war

Second in a series: UMass of the 1960s, '70s and early '80s remembered.

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

Campus life was turbulent in the late 1960s as students at the University of Massachusetts stood united by a common bond of anti-war protest in a way unkown to students today.

Sarah Boy came to the University in 1969 as a graduate student, "shellshocked" after working for the Peace and Freedom Party, which supported Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver for president in Cambridge and Providence in 1968. Boy is now special assistant to the vice-chancellor for student affairs.

"There was a lot of protest and a lot of action," she said. "In the spring of 1970 was the big strike against the war in Vietnam, when all classes were suspended for ages. There was a lot of support by both faculty and students for the strike against the war.

"Even the faculty who weren't out there going to teach-ins or walking around were supportive in saying we won't penalize you if you're striking, if you want to take what you have so far as a grade," Boy said.

Dean of Students William F. Field said faculty and students were standing on common ground against American involvement in Vietnam.

"The Vietnam War, although it was slow in getting a response, did get a very major response," Field said. "The response involved a lot of very articulate faculty, staff and students.

"We never really got caught with any kind of violence, even with the huge mobs of people, because the administration and faculty for the most part agreed with the students. The issue was something outside the campus," Field said.

But the war came home to many in the fall of 1970, when riot gear-clad state troopers removed students protesting the presence of Dow Chemical Corporation officials on campus. Dow manufactured the napalm and Agent Orange used by the US in Vietnam.

"While people were angry, and the University shut down after Kent State in an emotional bloodbath, there were always cooperative people who kept some sort of common moral thread to the protest," Field said.

Field said student leaders who tried to capitalize on the emotion to change local circumstances were usually lost in their struggle.

"The period after Kent State started out with great idealism. People took over Dickinson Hall (campus ROTC) and wanted to make it a day care center, and they took over something else and were going to make it a poor women's center," he said.

"It was an emotional response to an issue, not a calculated political response," he said.

Drugs were more a part of student life in the late 1960s and early '70s than today, and were part of the downfall of some student leaders, Field said.

"People were running around eating handfuls of anything anybody gave them in the Campus Center," he said.

Boy said the drug counseling center, Room To Move, began on campus in 1969. The center was located in the Student Union.

"Room to Move was a place where you could go if you were having a bad trip, people could take you, or if you couldn't stop smoking pot, you could go there," she said.

"People were really trying to figure out the different ways to organize society as a result of this war that devastated everyone," she said.

Field said students are no longer unified by issues today as they were in the Vietnam era. "Almost nobody who is alive on campus has ever seen a protest that had any real, broad based moral force behind it. We haven't had an issue that touched people in the way that the draft, the Vietnam War and Kent State did. They just got everybody." Next: Recent changes.

Talk stresses preservation

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts must preserve its farmland to develop a stronger agricultural industry, an assistant secretary of agriculture for the state said yesterday during the ninth annual Professional Agriculture Convention, sponsored by the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

Charles Costas said careful control and reduction of pesticides, the development of fresh ideas in marketing and the diversification of farming methods are important but, "If there's no place to farm, there's not much of a need to worry about pesticides and marketing and diversification."

The Agriculture Preservation Restriction Program saved more than 16,000 acres of Massachusetts farmland and allows retiring farmers to cancel debts so the can give their farms to their children, he said.

Costas said the department has been making a big push on specialty foods from the state and noted that 25 percent of the population of the US lives within 600 miles of the Connecticut River valley.

"The fact is there's a huge market out there, much of which hasn't been tapped by Massachusetts farmers and one we should be striving to satisfy," he said.

Costas was appointed to his post last Friday.

Stockbridge school director Jack Denson said of Costas, "He's been in agriculture and understands a lot of what our students will face in the future. It helps to keep us [Stockbridge] up to date to the needs of the industry."

The convention, which was held in the Campus Center Auditorium, displayed a job mart aisle, livestock, and a contest of student designs which depicted the importance of agriculture.

"The idea behind the convention is for the students to meet the professionals of the trade, to make more people aware of the Stockbridge school," said Jonathan Dowse, one of the convention organizers.

Jim Wilson, a senior management major, hangs from a tripod yesterday at the annual Stockbridge convention in the Campus Center.

A design made by floriculture majors won first prize.

Joette Sheehan, one of the winners, said, "What we try to do is depict a before and after to show what life is like with and without plants in a typical living-dining room setting."

The students organized the entire convention, Dowse said.

Hunger messages hit D.C. on foot

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students were asked yesterday to take a foot to give a hand to the hungry.

Cards with feet printed on them were handed out in the Student Union to mark Stamp Out Hunger Day, a joint effort of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group and the National Student Campaign Against Hunger.

Messages written on the cards will be sent to Washington, D.C., according to Jane Finn, UMass coordinator for the national campaign.

The campaign was "kind of like a petition, but just a little bit more creative. And it also worked as a very good fundraiser," she said.

The money raised, over $200, will be given to the Western Massachusetts Food Bank in Hadley, Finn said. The food bank distributes to soup kitchens and survival centers in the area.

"It went really well; people were really responsive. We got good messages," Finn said. Some messages were: "If people have the ability to eat, they have the right," and "Dear Republicans, try bread and water for a week," she said.

Feet were used as a theme at 24 campuses across the state, coordinated by MassPIRG, but the method was left up to the individual schools, Finn said.

"One college built a ten-foot papier-mache foot," she said.

The National Student Campaign Against Hunger is in its second semester at UMass. Finn said the group plans a food drive at the Super Stop and Shop in Hadley next week. The group has about 20 active members.

Third World women need education

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

Women in overpopulated Third World countries need to be educated about abortion and family planning, the president of the International Women's Health Coalition said at a lecture yesterday.

Joan Banks Dunlop expressed worry about "right-to-life" groups gaining support in those countries.

"If they win overseas, they will be able to win in this country," Dunlop told about 35 people at Hampshire College.

Dunlop said illicit induced abortion kills 84,000 people in the world each year, and stressed the importance of quality care.

The services provided by the coalition, which works to improve women's health care in the Third World, from contraception and immunization of children to legal advice.

"Women need these services and they need to be delivered well and with care," she said. "We need to get our sense of humanity back by concentration on the individual.

"We need to be willing to pay for human interaction and we're not," Dunlop said. It is very difficult to follow progress of individuals when there are no records kept in the clinics, and limited funding, she said.

Dunlop mentioned occasional disruptions by anti-abortion religious groups at the United Nations Decade for Women conference in Nairobi last summer, which she attended to discuss abortion and the quality of care that women receive.

Joan Banks Dunlop told a Smith College audience that Third World Women need family planning education.

"That (religion) is an age-old enemy of women," Dunlop said.

Referring to the men as having "enormous power," Dunlop said. "A lot of women never even refer to their husbands by name."

Dunlop is a member of the board of the Community Family Planning Council in New York City.

UMass Debate Union ranks among nation's top teams

By YOAV SHORR
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Debate Union, having won more tournaments than anyone else this season, now ranks among the top three teams in the country.

"We have a winning record against all our competition. In fact, the big name this year is UMass," said Joel Willmore, the union's director and coach.

This season, the union defeated such schools as Dartmouth College, and the University of North Carolina. UMass's competitors for the number-one spot are Dartmouth and Baylor University.

"There's absolutely no doubt that we will be among the top three in the coaches poll," said Willmore.

The team has qualified for the National Debate Tournament to be held at Dartmouth College next month, where the top 64 teams will compete. The poll, which will officially determine the union's seating at the national tournament, is made by 16 coaches from around the country.

The Debate Union consists of two teams with two members each, as well as a public debate squad of 12 to 20 members, which competes at high schools and at various civic organizations.

The traveling is done by debaters Daniel Povinelli, a senior anthropology major, and Mark Friedman, a sophomore political science major. As a team, the two have competed as far away as Texas and California.

"These two gentlemen have clearly been one of the best teams in the country over the past two years," Willmore said.

Also scoring high are first-year debaters Dayna Scott and Stacey Kinnamon. The upcoming district tournament will determine whether or not they will go to the nationals.

"We have an excellent shot at getting to the nationals," said Willmore, speaking of the team of Scott and Kinnamon.

Preparation for tournaments requires long hours of research, sometimes lasting through the night. "We place very large expectations on our debaters, said Willmore. "The four people going to tournaments are equivalent to professionals in terms of the level of preparation."

Ten weekends are devoted to tournaments, which can last up to four days each. "It's physically trying," said teammate Mark Friedman, telling of long debates and little sleep.

"A lot of people tend to underestimate what the team does for the University. We're representatives for the (school), literally from coast to coast," said Willmore.

The 'hardcore' behind Smith's sit-in

Persevere in College Hall

would have required students to present identification to security guards stationed at each entrance to College Hall, the administration building, after closing time. She changed her mind after students complained that this was a way of singling out demonstrators. Instead, guards will be located in nearby Seelye Hall and will "periodically walk a beat," Dunn said.

Dunn made no plans to have the students arrested, continuing the ongoing stalemate between the protesters and trustees. "I'm living one day at a time and that's all I'm willing to say," she said.

The students did make one exception to their blockade of College Hall when they allowed payroll employees to process the checks of cooks, physical plant and other union employees, so they could buy groceries.

At 3 a.m. yesterday, a group of five Dartmouth College students arrived at Smith to join the protest. The Dartmouth Community for Divestment, Hampshire and Mount Holyoke colleges and the Student Government Association at the University of Massachusetts have all endorsed and applauded the sit-in, saying their support showed a spirit of solidarity.

Some of the persistent protesters inside College Hall at Smith College.

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — A student bounded down the steps of College Hall at Smith College. "My dad wouldn't appreciate it, but what the hell," she said. But apparently she was not coming back to the sit-in; she was not a member of the hardcore.

The "hardcore," as the student protesters occupying Smith's main administrative building called themselves, were inside, and likely to remain there for some time. They are the backbone of the protest sparked by the refusal of Smith College trustees to divest more than a small fraction of $22.3 million worth of holdings in companies that do business with South Africa.

They are the students that began the sit-in Monday morning and stayed in College Hall during the first night of its occupation, urging other Smith students and faculty to join them.

Shortly after midnight yesterday morning, the hardcore looked exhausted but confident - those of them that were awake. Many weren't. Across from a solid oak door marked, "Dean of the College," a protester slumbered in a sleeping bag, clutching a teddy bear.

"We were up all night," one protester said. "Imagine if you'd been up since seven o'clock yesterday morning - how would you feel?

"But there's such a feeling of togetherness, of adrenaline," she said. There's an amazing amount of energy, because we're unified."

That sense of purpose pervaded the building during the wee hours yesterday morning. The door of the president's office bore a sign which read, "Divest now." On the door to the office of the president's secretaries was a sign saying, "Botha leads a bloody land; Smith College lends a hand! Shame on you."

"No. I'm not scared," said a demonstrator who identified herself only as Martha 2d. "There's no reason to be scared when we're here in the name of peace and we're right."

Still, she said, she was not yet wearing a white armband, symbol of those students willing to be arrested.

"My mother doesn't like it," she said, echoing the comments of many of her comrades.

The tension of possible arrest was evident among the group. "We heard the police were going to come in this morning, at noon, this evening," said a student as she walked toward the building with a pillow and a flashlight. "We're just not sure."

Red ribbons, symbols of the national protest against apartheid, were everywhere, including around the neck of a black-and-white cat that had unwittingly become the pet of the protesters.

As the night wore on, the noise level lowered and the building's lights dimmed, though most of the participants remained awake, huddled in groups or studying alone, waiting for the events of the morning.

If you haven't considered retail, you haven't looked seriously at Ames Department Stores. With more than 300 stores throughout the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic and sales approaching $2 billion, we're one of the fastest growing companies in America. For the individual with the right blend of business sense and creative vigor, advancement opportunities are almost endless!

We're looking for ambitious, creative people eager to become successful discount department store managers. A degree in business management, retailing and/or marketing is preferred. However, we'll interview other majors who are interested in a career in retailing.

Our Management Development Program will expose you to all aspects of our multi-faceted retail environment. As a management trainee you'll learn a host of disciplines ranging from inventory control to employee relations. This is field education so you'll learn by doing ... and if you're capable, you'll rise quickly in the organization. Successful candidates generally complete the management training program in 3½ - 4 years.

If your ready to apply your talents with a $1.8 billion retail leader, it's time to look closer at Ames.

Kids skip class for teachers

GREENFIELD (AP) — Saying they wanted to show support for their teachers in stalled contract talks, about 400 high school and middle school students walked out of classes yesterday.

About one-third of the 613 sixth through eighth graders at the Middle School left the building after their 10-minute homeroom class ended at 8:09 a.m. despite a plea from James Jason, president of the teachers union and a teacher at the Middle School, that they remain in class. Many of the students said their parents supported the protest.

An hour later, more than 150 of the 776 high schoolers marched out the front door of their building. Some carried signs or wore t-shirts asking an end to the 14-month-old contract squabble over work rules and wages.

"I'd like to do everything I can for the teachers. We're here to learn, and the teachers are what's going to teach us. If they're not happy, not having fun at their job, then it's not going to be right," junior Shawn Campbell told The Recorder newspaper.

"I think the school committee should realize they're not being fair to the teachers," said freshman Bill Moulton, who limped out on crutches carrying a sign that said, "Our teachers are your children's future."

They were joined later by other high schoolers, who trickled out of the building after favorite classes.

Author stresses questioning

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Teachers have to confuse students and make them question the reasons for their actions if informal education is to work, Brazilian educator and author Paulo Freire said yesterday at a forum about education in the residence halls.

"As much as possible, we should challenge students in order to encourage them to asking a question. Asking a question is important, but we have to ask, 'why are they questioning? Why do I want to know that?'" said Freire, a visiting professor at the University of Massachusetts.

In the Forum, members of UMass housing staff explained their problems with the educational programs in the residential areas, and received advice from Friere.

Freire said students are geared to learning in the classrooms rather than to learning outside them by interacting with the other students they live with.

"We have to invent ways to get in touch with students," Friere said. "We have to try and understand how they see themselves and their relationships with others and expectations of us."

Freire said he had taught a class which met four hours a day for three weeks, and that three students had to go to phychological therapy at the end of the class because they were so confused. "In order to learn, you have to get lost first," he said.

Educator and author Paulo Freire spoke yesterday to residence hall staff about informal education.

"We are engaged in the search of learning how to 'speak with" (students) instead of 'speaking to,' without abolishing the 'speaking to'" which is needed sometimes," Friere said.

"(The residential education program) is responsible and committed to the growth of student maturity," said Laurence Moneta, the assistant director of Housing Services, who also spoke at the forum.

Pulitzer winner speaks today

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

Tracy Kidder, who won the Pulitzer Prize for what one University of Massachusetts professor calls "literary journalism," will talk on the topic "Non-fiction Writing Today" at 4:00 p.m. today in Campus Center rooms 174 to 176.

Kidder's latest book, House, has been on the New York Times bestseller list for 18 weeks, according to Norman Sims, a UMass journalism professor.

Sims said House "is about the relationships between the carpenters, owners and architects in building a house on Bay Road."

"House is one of the half-dozen leading candidates for the American Book Award and the Pulitzer Prize this year," said Sims, who is editor of The Literary Journalists, published last year, which includes an excerpt from Kidder's The Soul of a New Machine.

Kidder won the Pulitzer Prize in 1982 for The Soul of a New Machine, which chronicled the creation of a new computer by Data General in Boston.

Speaking yesterday by telephone from his home in Williamsburg, Kidder said that he was influenced to write non-fiction by Seymour Krim, who was teaching in the early 1970s at the University of Iowa, where Kidder attended.

"He said you could do a lot of things a novelist could, but writing non-fiction instead of fiction," Kidder said. "He was convinced that a lot of non-fiction was a lot more interesting than a lot of fiction."

Kidder said he started writing non-fiction partly because he found it easier to get published than fiction.

"I'm still interested in writing fiction and getting it published," he said."In the past few weeks,I've been working on a short story. But non-fiction is a perfectly worthy branch of literature."

Kidder's talk is sponsored by Murray Schwartz, dean of the faculty of humanities and fine arts.

Police report:

Man runs red light; onlooker hits pole

A 23-year-old Dennisport man was cited for failing to stop at a red light after he allegedly caused an accident at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday at University Drive and Amity Street corner, Amherst police said.

A 19-year-old Amherst man saw the other man run the red light, then lost control of his car and hit a telephone pole, police said.

In other reports, University of Massachusetts police said a radar detector valued at $200 was reported stolen at 5:10 p.m. Tuesday from a 1986 Chevrolet parked in lot 42.

SGA needs unity

Roth/Burgess

The Student Government Association at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is in a state of extraordinary crisis. It is on a threshold, lost in purpose and lost in unification and just waiting for a new direction. The situation is not only ripe for a change, it compels it.

Historically speaking, the power and influence students have been able to direct under the juristiction of the senate at UMass is highly unusual. The deeply entrenched SGA mega-bureaucracy symbolized that uniqueness. Institutions like the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy, the Legal Services Office , the Off Campus Housing Office, the self registration and regulation of all student groups, the actual budgeting of a multi-million dollar trust fund, the large number of student run cooperative businesses and the employment of an entirely student run judicial system represent a powerful infrastructure and an amazing accomplishment given the inherent limitations of students such as the lack of professional training, continuity experience, etc.

Self-perpetuating crises are and have been historically inherent within the SGA. However, we have a strong feeling that the present crisis is different. Currently the SGA lacks a critical tool - a long term pro-active program. It also lacks a long term commitment and philosophy. Its focus in the very recent past has been primarily for senators to work against each other rather than for each other, which hurts us all.

The senate clearly needs a change. We, as the official student representative body need to re-evaluate our priorities and directions, we need to find our common ground and nurture respect for others and for ourselves. We need to be less dogmatic and more flexible. We need to work together. Our days are numbered if we choose to continue on our present destructive path.

Creating this transformation is extremely difficult. Developing specific ideas is challenging and implementing them is even more difficult. Each of our other commitments (classes, 'real money," jobs, etc.) is a primary distraction from working for a better SGA. Other essential SGA activities (saving the sports teams, fee negotiations, SGA Constitution work, Trustee responsibilities, creating more study space, etc.) also make it difficult to effectively produce the necessary change. But without a doubt, things must change and we can choose to progressively guide this change or we can choose to accept externally imposed change. "If you don't fight for what you want - you deserve what you get."

One specific vehicle towards developing new ideas and solutions to old and new Senate problems is the SGA/SATF Review Commission. Our participation on that commission and its development, combined with our passionate desire to help create a better SGA/SATF, is but one of the necessary steps the senate has to take.

The senate should prioritize leadership workshops and parlimentary procedure workshops. People who dominate the senate discussions talk less and vice-versa. "Minds are like parachutes - they only function when open."

Trust bulding is a critical priority that all of us in the University Community must choose. This will be a slow and frustrating process but it must be done. Spending more time communicating and less time fighting can only help. Come on UMass — let's get it together!

Stacy Roth and Dani Burgess are the SGA co-presidents.

Salvadoran restoration

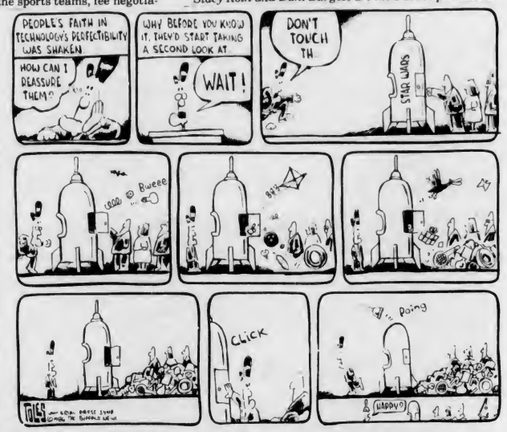
Peter Dow

El Salvador has been conspicuously absent from the media's headlines recently, which has both positive and negative ramifications in the United States.

First, from the conservative perspective, "no news is good news," at least with respect to the amount of national media attention devoted to El Salvador. Secondly, however, the lack of media attention denies the American public information about El Salvador's progress in the military, social, and democratic spheres. Indeed, the reason we have heard so little from El Salvador is that the situation is progressing very well.

The guerillas' downfall is attributed to their failure on two fronts; military and political. First, the Salvadoran army has become a greatly improved and more disciplined fighting machine. The U.S. has provided El Salvador with a small number of military advisors, 55, and a limited amount of military assistance (with many strings attached). The Salvadorans have taken these fairly modest levels of assistance and have transformed a small, undisciplined army of 9,028 troops in 1980 into an effective and growing force of more than 30,000 in 1985.

Much of the credit for their success goes to the 15 U.S. advisors who created and trained El Salvador's counterinsurgency battalion, the "Atlacatl." In addition, the increased mobility and alertness of the army has made possible the liberation of many areas of El Salvador which were abandoned to the FMLN early in the war. The essentially "non-strategic" departments of San Miguel, Morazan, and Chalatenango (near the Honduran border), were controlled by the FMLN for a long period of time, but now are back under the tutelage of the government.



The major reason for the downfall of the FMLN is its obvious lack of support within the El Salvadoran population. The insurgents' military strategy has consisted of a two-pronged attack: first, a war of attrition against the Salvadoran economy and infrastructure; and secondly, a terrorist war against the El Salvadoran population and their government. The latter tactic has been utilized to a greater extent lately, as the communists struggle to gain troop strength. Americans heard about the kidnapping of Inez Duarte Duran by the FMLN in 1985, and the demand that 34 jailed guerillas be freed. The communists have also kidnapped over 20 Salvadoran mayors, who will be held until the government releases more imprisoned guerillas. The unpopularity of the FMLN is further evident in their terrorist attacks against the populaiton. In addition, the regular ranks of the FMLN have suffered from large-scale desertions, further weakening their strength.

The lack of support for the communist guerillas has been accompanied by a dramatic decrease in the activity of the "death squads," in addition to the population's greater faith in Duarte's government. Alvaro Magana, the former interim president of El Salvador, attributes El Salvador's success "to the advent of democracy." Indeed, while both the FMLN on the left and the ARENA party on the right would welcome the collapse of Duarte's Christian Democratic government, the right (particularly Roberto D'Aubisson) has come to realize that the democratic process is the only legitimate and acceptable path to political power. Thus the right's acquiescence to the political process and the subsequent decline in "death squad" activity has weakened the FMLN political posture further by depriving them of what was once a powerful justification for their own resort to violence.

In short, if the present progress in El Salvadoro continues, it will, hopefully, just be a matter of time before the El Salvadoran communist threat is eliminated. The FMLN recently received another crushing blow when Mexico decided to re-establish formal diplomatic relations with El Salvador after a six-year break. This is especially damaging to the guerillas, in light of the fact that Mexico led a vigouous international campaign in 1980-1981 to give the FMLN recogintion as a legitimate political group, on the level of the PLO.

Thus the FMLN continues to struggle for "power sharing" in the Salvadoran government, and has not realized that the most effective way to gain political power is to relinquish their arms and become involved in the democratic political process.

Reagan's godly mission

Mark Caldeira

He's cool. Flashing by planets just a wrinkle from the speed of light, he's on top of the galaxy. For the freedom of the universe he valiantly soars through space, dealing with harsh blows of his adversaries. This is no ordinary voyage. He is no ordinary man. His name is Ronald Reagan and he's on a mission from God.

"Yo, Nance, chuck me a smoke, hey hey."

The most important mission of all time surely must be a nerveracking experience. Kinda like sex after 70.

"Which kind would you like, dear?"

"Armageddon honey. You're slippin', you're slippin'. Now c'mon up here poopsy and watch ol' gipper nick this comet. Brrraaowww... jzeeeww..."

No task, no feat is unaccomplishable for the Holy Warrior. He fears no evil; he spares no enemy. Though his cupeth may, at times, overfloweth, he is quick to suck up the spills with rapacious lust. Yes God is on his side, and He is republican.

"This is Rambo-RR callin' Big Guy, come in Big Guy. Enemy planet within sight...within vaporizing range...will zero in...OK you subversive, detestable rodent! Defy Our laws will you? Well take this you red pinko little rock...and take that you crummy piece of dust!"

PKKHRRROOOOWWW!

"Darling! Darling! Do you realise what you just did?! You just blew up Mars darling! Honey, why did you blow up our closest planet?!"

"Don't lament, my puddleface. The job's got to be done. It's in His plans. Besides, you know as well as every good American knows - we can't allow any damn Reds in our galaxy. Don't worry, we're protected in the Monroelexy Doctrin. Besides, good ol' Jeannie K. will cover for us. Now put away those pills and come take the reigns. If those high school kids only saw you with those...Now c'mon. Yahoo!"

Letting his faithful sidekick have a shot at the reckless life, the Gipper descends into his private isolation tank for some cosmic inspiration. Chapter for chapter, Rocketboy Ron absorbs the Great American Shark Hunt and the King James Bible like two hits of pure LSD-25.

"This is wild," he thinks, decadently. "Gotta recommend these to Georgie and Caspie. They'll get a boom from this combo, ha ha!"

I once heard Ron rappin' in '68 'bout blood spillin' and gettin' it over with now. He's a serious, goal-oriented, go-and-get-it kind of guy. The Unprocrastinator.

Just as he begins to get off on his "back-to-the-golden-age" fix, intergalactic radio WWAR splurts out the Door's "Not to touch the earth, not to see the sun, nothin' left to do but run, run run let's ru..."

"Pumpkin face! Get that stastophobic un-American profanity off the air! You know I hate that song. Now that's more like it...ya...ooh...on top of ol' smokey, all covered with..."

-Smoke. (Just thought I'd finish it for him.) Ya, smoke. That's the way old cowboys like it - thick white wmoke eminating from bright red flames. And that's the way this little story will end - with smoke. Let's hope the Gipper doesn't end us all with smo--.

Help to make spring break safe

Florida Mothers Against Drunk Driving, MADD, hopes that this year's College Spring Break will be safe for everyone. Last year's tragedies included three students who fell to their deaths off hotel balconies and two others who were murdered hitchhiking to Florida. We sympathize with their parents because we understand the anguish of senseless loss.

We want you to come to Florida to have good times and enjoy well-earned vacations. But please do not come to drive and drink or to use drugs.

SPRING BREAK - MAKE IT SAFE.

Lessons from Nicaragua

Tom Neilson

It was June 12, 1985 when I decided to go to Nicaragua. At 3 p.m. that afternoon, I was in a cell at the Chicopee jail, the consequence of the civil disobedience action at Westover Air Force Base. We went to Westover in protest of the Congressional vote which funded $27 million to Contra mercenaries. Jail was not very empowering, particularly when my glasses (a potential instrument of self-destruction) were confiscated and I and my 20/400 vision were non-focusing behind bars.

With the renewed threat of Contra terrorism against private citizens, particularly during the harvest period when many crops are destroyed by Contra attacksd, I decided to go to Nicaragua and participate in the coffee harvest. This plan was altered a few months later when the local construction brigade, Construyamos Juntos, asked me to accompany them to San Pedro de Lovago in Chontales district in order to build a school. I left on Dec. 15 and told the brigade I would meet them when they arrived in early January.

I hadn't been in Nicaragua in over 12 years. The last time was in June '73, six months after the earthquake. Downtown Managua was a disjointed array of brick, mortar, and rebar. A number of people wanted me to know that they were thankful for all the earthquake aid that Americans had given. They also wanted me to know that Somoza had eaten most of it.

Others were more explicit. They informed me of badly needed social changes which would be realized with the revolution. One gentleman, Julio, emphasized that when the revolution came, it would not be a revolution against America, rather an insurrection against a fascist dictator named Somoza. He was afraid of the bad publicity the Nixon administration would give any change in government. "Nixon will call us communists," he said with a grin, and added that if Americans knew the reality of Nicaragua, they would never support the Somoza government.

Julio was wrong. The revolution didn't happen during Nixon's tenure. But when it came, it was an overthrow of the dictator as well as the yoke of the foreign power that maintained his oppressive government. At present, this foreign power's president (Reagan) is requesting $100 million to continue funding Contra mercenaries to return fascism to Nicaragua.

Julio was right, however, about the communist label. He is also still right that if Americans knew the reality of Nicaragua, they would not support the U.S. war against that country.

Reagan frequently refers to Daniel Ortega as that little, commie dictator. The Communist Party only received 1 percent of the vote in an election which ex-CIA analysts David MacMichael and John Stockwell, as well as numerous international observers have acclaimed to be a legitimate, democratic process.

Perhaps I hung out in the wrong neighborhoods, but I only talked with one person who identified himself as a supporter of the Communist Party. A trowel and level were the tools of his trade, not a Contra knife for castration and otherwise murder of civilians.

If first grade (1954) I got under my desk to be prepared for the commies. Thirty-two years later, the Reagan administraiton and those who support his policy in Central America are still getting under their desks.

Using techniques of double-speak

Sarah Bush

Women Exploited by Abortion, a new organization whose advertising methods employ the latest techniques of moral double-speak, held an information sessions at Amherst College last Friday. "Come and hear the facts," advised their flyers. Unfortunately, facts were not a concern of the panel, for under the guise of progressive social activity lies the real interest of WEBA: instilling legally and institutionally the narrow, restricting mores of Christianity--a viewpoint left conveniently out of the flyers and press releases.

Although throughout the evening, WEBA repeatedly denied any political intentions, one of the three main goals listed in their propoganda booklet is dedication "to stopping abortion and abortion funding by making our voices heard in our nation's law-making institutions."

Tina Carter explained her story first, describing herself as a heavy drinker at the time of her unexpected pregnancy and was, in her own words, "not really emotionally stable at the time." Tina felt exploited because she "wanted my friends, my family to make my choice for me, but it didn't work out that way...everyone told me I should get an abortion." Tina, it seems, has trouble with the definition of the word "choice." She asked her friends to tell her what option they thought best for her and they picked one, they chose.

Tina then complained that once at the abortion clinic no one "tried to talk me into keeping my baby." Imagine a clinic which respects the decision of an adult client who has made an appointment for an abortion.

Cynthia Moriarty, too, was a victim of the "abortion industry" that was ominously referred to in the flyers. Her manipulation began when the Springfield College Infirmary suggested that she come in for a blood test which "turned out to be positive and I found out in a weird way: The nurse wasn't really experienced with counseling and when I called her on the phone she told me 'to come in, I think it's positive' and that really destroyed me." It's difficult news, Cynthia, but what is the nurse supposed to tell you, "pick a card?" The coup d'etat in this presentation of the facts was when Cynthia confessed that "the only thing that prevented me from mentally withdrawing from life (dramatic pause) was that I held the anaesthesiologist's hand." Interesting news after Tina's sweeping statement earlier that abortion clinics "don't give you any medication at all" during the operation.

During the question and answer forum I finally asked who the "abortion industry" actually was. A man in the audience informed me that it was Planned Parenthood who also supported compulsory sterilization and abortion. I asked WEBA for percentages concerning their list of the unknown, unpublicized effects of abortion which their information booklet listed as "sterility, shock, coma, blood clots, loss of other organs, suicidal impulses withdrawal and hostility" to name just a few. I asked for the percentages. No one knew. I asked for how many other operations could these same symptoms occur, including pregnancy and post-natal depression. Again, no one knew. The facilitator, Susan Szetela, from Massachusetts Citizens for Life, explained that it was too much to ask them to provide specific information, regardless of the promise in the press release to "Come and hear the facts."

WEBA is offensive because its entire raison d'etre is misinformation. This organization is not concerned with the exploitation of reality, not about freedom but about guilt and indoctrination. I respect the regret of these women over their decision, but I do not respect that under false pretenses they distort the facts in order to promote the subjugation of free thought and choice through the archaic doctrine of one organized religion.

Policy ought to be reconsidered

This letter is in response to a recent policy editorial written by the Collegian Board of Editors on the issue of MassPIRG. In the editorial, the Collegian suggests that MassPIRG change their current funding from the waivable fee, which has supported the organization for 13 years, to what they term a positive check-off or a donation system.

There are many reasons why a donation system makes little or no sense for a group with such a strong student mandate as MassPIRG. Foremost among them at UMass, however, it that endorsing a donation system plays right into the hands of the few individuals (calling themselves "Students for Participatory Democracy") who want MassPIRG off campus.

Think about it. A few people decide they don't want PIRG at UMass. They create controversy about the subject by running a campaign of misinformation and confusion. Are UMass students then supposed to give these individuals what they want by undermining PIRG's funding in order to "defuse controversy?"

Most UMass students would say "No," as demonstrated by last week's 79 percent to 21 percent vote. We hope that the Collegian reconsiders its policy.

The BOG: vital student interest

What is the most frequently asked question on this campus "When does add-drop end? What's your major? Is it Friday yet?" These popular queries don't even come close; the most oft asked question is, "What is the BOG?"

The BOG is the Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors, the student government organization that oversees just about everything that goes on in the Campus Center and the Student Union. The Board acts as a watchdog over administrative expenditure of students' money, it provides support for myriad student services, and it sets policy for the day-to-day activities in the CC/SU complex.

You say you still aren't sure of what the BOG is? It's simple --look around. If you've ever seen vendors on the CC Concourse, ever joined an RSO that has an office in the Student Union, ever eaten in the Hatch or the TOC, ever studied in the music reading room or created something in the craft shop or explored an exhibit in the art gallery, ever seen bands in the Hatch or the ballroom, ever slept in the hotel, or ever been to a comedy show in the Blue Wall, you've already met the BOG.

And now's your chance to become involved. You can be a part of programming or policy-making and much more. Elections for the Board of Governors will be on March 10 and 11, the same dates as the SGA senate and presidential elections. Help us provide for student interests in the CC/SU complex. At the same time, you'll be enriching your own college experience through a sense of participation, contribution, and satisfaction. Expand you horizons while helping others to expand theirs.

Nomination forms and information for the curious are available in Campus Center room 817. Come talk to us, share your concerns and your enthusiasm. Remember, student governance works only to the extent that students make it work. We await your questions.

Mark Friedman, special projects coordinator
CC/SU Board of Governors

Don't overlook their merits . . .

I feel that it's time that someone stood up for a group on this campus that's taken a lot of abuse. No, I don't mean gays, radicals, republicans or even earthy crunchies. The much-maligned group I'm referring to is men.

To believe most of the angry letters to the editor and grafitti on this campus, men are: chauvinistic, stupid, rude, sex-crazed slobs who never tie their shoelaces. Somehow, I have managed to live fairly blissfully with three of these creatures for the past year and I would like to dispute some of these claims.

My roomates all made the Dean's List last semester. They chop wood, clean, and take out the garbage. They can all cook twice as well as I can and even do their dishes. They're also good at little extras like carrying kegs and moving furniture. I don't have to fight for the shower or phone like I did last year, and they've never spent their rent money on a shopping spree.

This is not to say that living with men is always wonderful. I have had nightmares about bowl games and they have an annoying tendency to leave the toilet seat up. In the rude department, they exhibited their flair for interior decorating by tacking our dead fish to the living room wall. I can't borrow their clothes or perfume and their taste in magazines leaves a lot to be desired.

On the whole, though, it's been a good year with no battles or crises. So what if they don't buy "Cosmo?" At least they've never made me watch Knight Rider. And guess which gender is better represented at our parties? Thanks, guys.

In defense of the righteous ones

Recently, I wrote to the Collegian expressing my concerns over the many slanderous comments directed toward Christians that appeared last semester in the Collegian. That letter was never printed. Therefore, I am sure that this letter will not be printed, even though it appears that the majority of letters printed are anti-Christian.

I am not making any attempt to restate my previous letter. Obviously, the typical white male who believes in God and the authority of the Bible cannot get a letter printed. So, I will try to be less dogmatic in order not to offend your delicate eyes.

First, I would like to praise Rusty Denton, a Collegian columnist who is not afraid to state the truth. Once in a while Denton offends people's faiths. However, the sickening responses to his column are always either directly insulting or are judging his commitment to Christ. We should all look to ourselves and check our own faith. It might be possible that Denton's faith is the true faith.

I could go on and attempt to explain what my faith is and what Christianity is according to the Bible. However, most of the anti-Christian leftists do not care what I believe. They just want to keep insulting my faith from their preconceived, warped view of Christianity.

I am sorry if it looks like you are one of these people. I truly do not mean only to insult you. But if people think Christianity is is not correct, then they are just plain wrong. Denton was man enough to admit he was wrong just recently. He publically repented. Are others willing to seek out what they believe, then admit it if they are wrong and repent to God?

If you are interested in expressing your views on Christianity, write to the Collegian. Maybe they will have guts enough to print something in response that does not satisfy the "politically left" views that prevail in the letters printed.

Winter and Buchanan combine for a blues fest

By GREG FALLON
Collegian Correspondent

Johnny Winter — Roy Buchanan — who should I talk about first? When two bluesmasters play on the same stage in the same night, you know there's going to be some serious rockin' going on. But since Roy opened the show up, I guess I'll talk about him first.

Roy started up with a tune off of his latest album. The song "Short Fuse" was your basic blues riff with Roy doing some heavy wailing on the guitar he's been playing for years. After all he is the master of the telecaster. Next came a tune called "Jack the Ripper." Again, a blue fans dream. The bassist even told the guitar players in the audience how to play it. Roy played with sincerity that has earned him the reputation as the most soulful electric guitarist in the world.

Roy's been around. In 1971, he was offered an invitation to join the Rolling Stones. His style of play has influenced such great guitarists as Jeff Beck, Billy Gibbons, and Robbie Robertson.

Roy wrapped his set up with a trio of Jimi Hendrix songs. When he started "Hey Joe" and sensed the crowd's enthusiastic response, he knew he had hit a vein., His bassist lured him into Purple Haze by teasing him with that songs bass introduction. When Roy left the stage after one full hour of playing, the crowd was more than warmed up for Johnny Winter.

When Johnny took the stage with his headless guitar, I knew he would do a modern and upbeat set. But that was only the beginning of his set. After a few songs off of his latest album, "Serious Business", Johnny went into some classic blues. His bassist accompanied him on harmonica with some soulful wails and shakes. Johnny took the opportunity during "My Time After a While" to really let out.

Then came the slide. That was waited for and, of course, well received. A lot of the songs off of his new album really call for the slide and Johnny showed us how it was done.

The crowd was extremely well behaved much to the chagrin of the "security" there and not to mention the local division of Amherst Police. After all, this type of Blues show attracts what James Watt would have called "the wrong element". Admittedly there was a lot of leather there and a few Harleys outside, but what's the matter with a little Americana, counter-culture style?

Anyway, the show was a blues fans heaven. With just the right combination of rock n' roll, (Johnny wrapped up his first encore with "Johnny B. Goode"), slow blues and rhythm and blues. Roy surprised newcomers to the scene but performed as well as usual for his old fans. Johnny Winter really rocked out and put the crowd on its dancin' feet. The show was a blast.

LIVEWIRE
BY TOM MIDDLETON

Looks like there's some variety this week, not a lot of music, but enough to keep most of us happy. One of the following should be fun for the whole family.

Tonight Cuban saxophonist Paquito D'Rivera will play the Iron Horse in Northampton. This guy has a fine reputation for belting out hot, latin jazz. His sound is intense and dynamic so he'll probably rattle a few windows at this show.

Also tonight, the Prime Suspects are in the Hatch. If you are up for it, blow off homework and go see the band...it's free.

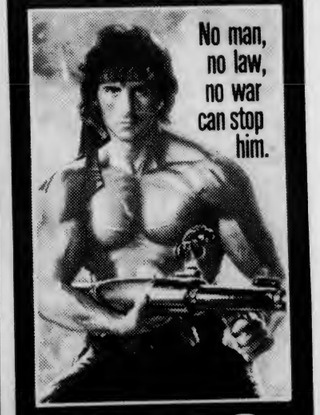
Friday night sounds like fun. A four-band benefit bash at Hampshire College for only $2. The headline act is, get this...The Archbishop's Enema Fetish. What more could you ask for than this 14-piece band that plays all kinds of music? They were banned from most of the clubs in Boston which means they've got to be fun.

But wait, that's not all. You get Farmer Ted, a band from Alabama, and also the Potatoe Heads and Skeletor. The last two are local. The Potatoe Heads play fun stuff and Skeletor does heavy metal covers. The show starts at 10 p.m. at the College's Red Barn which is supposed to be a real nice, funky place. The money goes to buy more sound equipment for the school. It's on the bus route and it's a bargain.

If you only need a small dose of music, the movie Spinal Tap is playing downtown until tomorrow. This is a great spoof of big money rock bands. Lots of laughs.

Tuesday night, Jonathan Edwards will perform at the Iron Horse. This guy has had a few bigtime hits. You know, he does that song, "Sunshine go away today...I don't feel much like dancing." Edwards also sings "Shanty," a song about laying around the shanty and putting a good buzz on. Now you remember. Anyway, he does put on a good, polished show of acoustic pop.

Wednesday night should be good. The Golden Palominos will perform in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00. This group is made up of members from lots of other bands and this show will feature; Cream's bass player, the legendary Jack Bruce, Bernie Worrell who plays keyboard for the Talking Heads, Jody Harris, and Chris Stamey of The dB's. There are strong rumors that Michael Stipe of R.E.M. and Johnny Lydon will appear. Lyden was formerly Johnny Rotten, lead singer of the Sex Pistols.



The Pogues will be playing at Pearl Street in Northampton Wednesday night. This band does a mix of Irish folk music and punk, all on acoustic instruments. The band is from Ireland and are produced by Elvis Costello. Grab a bottle of stout and have some fun.

(above)Anton Fier will be appearing with the Golden Palominos on March 6. Tickets are on sale now. (below)The Pogues are playing at Pearl Street on March 5.

ARTS

Mummenschanz excites senses

By ADAM LAVINE
Collegian Staff

Mummenschanz, a Swiss mime-mask theater troupe presented a creative display of their unique art in the Fine Arts Center Tuesday night and last night.

Mummenschanz, deriving its name from the German mummen, meaning game or play, and schanz, meaning chance, stands for a medieval game played with masks to hide facial expressions. The significance of the group's title was distinctly obvious in the performance, as many of the strange and beautiful effects created by the players relied on the intricate costumes.

One particularly stunning effect utilized a body suit with long, flowing tentacles instead of arms and legs. The performer, splayed upon the center of the stage, waved the limbs of the suit, creating a hypnotic, swirling dance. Other costumes depended heavily upon the troupe's extraordinary use of body language. One particular costume had a white, pointed mask which, when combined with the mimist's crab-like walk, gave the audience the impression of a giant insect scrabbling across the stage.

Floriana Frassetto, one of the troupe's members, is responsible for most of the troup's distinctive costumes. When asked how the ideas for the costumes are sparked, she replied that the ideas could come from any situation at any time.

"I was walking in Zurich," she said, "when I saw a group of children playing with large, inflatable zepplins. Within three seconds, I found out where they had bought them."

After buying twenty of the massive balloons, she and the other members experimented with different designs and movements utilizing the material.

"When you have the idea in your head it seems so simple," said Frassetto. "But the material limits your ideas and they become different. But, sometimes the differences are better." Her original idea for the balloons was to craft a huge skirt to dance in, but she found that idea 'limiting.'

Many of the costumes are 'blind', with no eyeholes for the performers to see out of.

"We cue each other," said Frassetto, "with hisses and foot stamps. Also, the audience reaction cues us, telling us when to move. But we are so used to feeling each other on stage that it is not difficult."

Other illusions were devised by Mummenschanz's unusual use of lighting. A completely black backdrop was at the rear of the stage while only the front was lit. Stage assistants, dressed in black, could move around and carry props undetected at the back of the stage. Using careful lighting, the props carried by the invisible assistants appeared to float on their own accord, causing statue-like geometric shapes to magically fly together and disassemble.

Frasetto attributes the group's initial popularity in their first tour to the 1970's feeling of self-interpretation.

"People have more difficulty concentrating now; they are spoiled." But she is confident that the group will continue to be successful as, "People have hearts, and they still like to hear them beat."

The group, created and performed by Andres Bossard, Floriana Frassetto and Bernie Schurch, has performed in Europe and America since 1972.

University Placement Service
Spring Recruiting Schedule

This list contains RESUME DUE DATES THROUGH THE END OF THE SEMESTER. Resumes for open schedules may be turned in at the Whitmore sign-up desk from 9:00-3:00 Mondays & Tuesdays and at the University Career Center any day for pre-screened schedules. The Whitmore desk will also accept resumes for pre-screened schedules.

There will be only one more schedule in the COLLEGIAN during the Spring semester. Last minute changes will be posted at the University Career Ctr., Whitmore sign-up desk and Campus Center Assistance desk. NEXT SCHEDULE WILL APPEAR ON MARCH 25!

To use this schedule:
1. Select the companies with which you will request an interview.
2. If pre-screened(P) submit 2 resumes by the due date; resumes may go to the University Career Ctr. or Whitmore Sign-up desk(Mon-Tues 9:00-3:00)
3. If open(C) submit 1 resume on one of the due dates; these resumes MUST GO TO THE WHITMORE SIGN-UP DESK. IF YOU HAND IN MORE THAN ONE RESUME FOR COMPANIES COMING ON THE SAME DAY, YOU MUST CODE THE BACK WITH PRIORITY A,B,C, WITH A AS YOUR MOST IMPORTANT SELECTION
4. Each resume should be stamped with the information needed; stamps are available at the Whitmore sign-up desk and the University Career Center.
5. If a company has several job descriptions, you may have to indicate you preference. Always check the notebooks before handing in resumes.
6. Two weeks before the interview date the final schedule will be posted at the University Career Center, Whitmore sign-up desk and the Campus Ctr. Assistance desk. IT IS YOUR RESPONSIBILITY TO VERIFY YOUR APPOINTMENT TIME. If no list has been posted by 1 week before the interview date, you should check daily, since we add completed schedules for pre-screened companies as lists of selections are received from those companies.

Additional information on positions, locations, schedules etc. at the University Career Center and at the Whitmore Sign-up desk.

VISA CODE; P=Permanent Resident Visa: C=U.S. Citizenship

Please check the message board and the schedules board at the University Career Center for current interview requirements!! If you miss an interview because you did not check these schedules you may lose future interviewing privledges. Also remember to pick up company literature at the Career Center.

Spring training goes indoors at UMass

Baseball team prepares for Florida trip

By MATT GERKE

Although the cold and sometimes rainy weather we've been experiencing lately has ruined plans for many people, the University of Massachusetts baseball team, like their professional counterparts, are well into spring training. Even without any sun.

With Boyden gym and a little creativity, the squad is able to practice the fundamentals, although it will never replace the game experience that they can get outdoors.

"We get as ready as we can," said UMass coach Dick Bergquist, whose troops are in their fourth week of practice, "although this is a limited facility."

The Minutemen make the most of the half-gym they have at their disposal. After 10 or 15 minutes of calistenics, they seperate into groups to work on individual skills. The pitchers and catchers go to one side to warm-up while fielders go off on their own to practice hitting and fielding.

After throwing at slow speed for a short time, the pitchers pitch off simulated mounds. The team owns four of these platforms which are made of wood and built to the dimensions of a real mound.

"The wood mounds definitely help you out," said senior pitcher and co-captain Bob Kostro. "In terms of measurements, they're just like the real thing, but you don't get the feel of a real mound."

After the pitchers are thoroughly warmed up, batters step in to face them but do not swing at any of the pitches. They are there only to give the pitchers a strike zone to throw at.

While this is going on, the rest of the squad practices hitting with an Incrediball, a type of ragball that does not travel as far as a real baseball when it is hit. While Bergquist, who is in his 20th year as head coach, works with the pitchers, assistant coaches Ken Hayner and Ray Cardinale pitch batting practice and instruct the players on fielding.

The squad also hits off tees on certain days and has a batting cage downstairs in Boyden which they use before and sometimes after practice.

After throwing, the pitchers practice their pickoff moves while other players go through drills to increase agility. The workout is finished after the team runs wind sprints.

"The indoor practice helps, but we would be able to get a lot more done if we were able to work outside," said junior Sean Flint, a catcher and the other co-captain.

"We get some good things done with the agility work and conditioning, but we really put it all together when we go down to Florida."

This is perhaps the most important part of the Minutemen's spring training ritual, and the most fun.

The team travels south during spring break to play a full schedule of preseason games. This year, that schedule consists of nine games in eight days. The Minutemen open with a doubleheader against Yale on March 15 at Ormand Beach.

"We need the trip to Florida," said Bergquist, who was the Baseball Committee chairman for the NCAA and is considered an expert on collegiate rules, "Because we have to pitch live and see live pitching as well. It also enables us to work on fly balls and feel the competition of real games. We try to get out and work on the tennis courts or the edge of the outfield but it doesn't always work."

"The teams that have a fieldhouse have a definite advantage," continued the coach. "But we get in a fairly good practice. By the end of our six weeks, we're working seven days a week and it's a good way to break the skills down. And as I said before, Florida helps a lot."

As for the regular season, the Minutemen open at Temple for a critical three-game Atlantic 10 series on March 28 and Bergquist is looking forward to it.

"I'm very optimistic," said Bergquist. "I think we have more pitching depth than we have in the past but we're still a very young team. Eleven of the 23 players are freshman and we hope they'll respond."

Backstroker John Turner is one of several UMass swimmers trying to fight off injury prior to this weekends New England championship.

Injuries, sickness hamper swimmers

UMass still going in with confidence

By JOE ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

This weekend, the University of Massachusetts men's swim team will try to do what they haven't done since 1960.

The Minutemen will visit Springfield College to compete in the New England Championship meet on Friday through Sunday. Besides the normal competition from other teams UMass will have to swim through some injuries. Senior co-captain Pat Mullen and backstroke specialist John Turner are the most vital swimmers on the shelf.

Turner will be fighting tendinitis among other things in his shoulder. It's the same pain he has battled all season. "It's a whole mixture of thimgs in his shoulder. I think he'll swim all three days. He's in a lot of pain but he's also been really courageous," UM coach Russ Yarworth said.

Mullen has some severely pulled stomach muscles that pulled him out of the Atlantic 10 meet. "He dove real well last night so he should be ready to go," diving coach Bob Newcomb said. Yarworth added, "Mullen will give it a shot, he's been working hard all year." He'll be a real key because he's the only diver UMass has now. Tim Ramacciotti is out with a ruptured ear drum he hurt Monday night.

A number of other swimmers are on the down side of colds. Long-distance freestyler Rick Bishop, Jim Flannery, and Paul McDonough all had the flu in the past week or so and Jim Kuhns, has had sinusitis. Fred Marius and Mark Waters had a bout with a mild pneumonia.

For Yarworth it comes down to this, "You've been sick for six days or you've trained for six months, which is more important? Obviously, it's the training, and the kids need to convince themselves mentally to be ready."

"A lot of them have had it about a week and are on the down side of it, a couple of them haven't swam in awhile. The last two weeks we've been fighting it mentally and we're psyched to go now," Yarworth said.

The sudden attack of the bug hasn't really dimmed the team's confidence. "We were exhausted after the Atlantic 10 meet but, everyone will do their best times this weekend. Every UMass record other than the butterfly events and the 1000 and 1,650 freestyle events will be broken," Yarworth confidently claimed.

Senior Drew Donovan also went on to suggest breaking the New England records in the 100, 200 and 500 freestyle events. Currently, Drew is ranked first in New England in the 50, 100, 200, 500, and 1000 freestyle events. The co-captain also has the national NCAA meet after this one if he comes in with the qualifing times, of which all are in reach.

UMass basketball notebook

Sutton and Brown up for A-10 honors

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts basketball players still have something to look foward to this season.

Sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton and freshman foward David Brown are likely to be named to Atlantic 10 Conference postseason all-star teams in ballotting just completed by the league's media.

Sutton, a 6-3 shooting guard, averaged 17.8 points-per-game (18.4 in the league) and is one of the favorites to make either the first or second-team all-stars while Brown, a 6-5 swingman, should make the all-rookie team.

Brown started all but one game this season when pulled stomach muscles kept him on the bench. He also averaged close to ten points and over ten rebounds while playing an average of 30 minutes a game.

"Those type of things really don't concern me," said Sutton, who should've made the all-roookie team last year but was passed over. "It would be nice to make it, but as a sophomore I realize other players in the league that have been here a while might get it over me."

Brown, the most consistent of UM's freshman class, didn't make the rookie-team a goal, but welcomes the attention.

"Hey, it's nice to be noticed," said Brown. "I think I've had a pretty decent year."

Acting A-10 commissioner Ron Bertovich, in attendance at the UMass-Rutgers playoff game on Tuesday night, said both players received many voted with Brown his own personal choice as rookie-of-the-year.

"I think both of those guys deserve whatever they get as far as awards go," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen. "Lorenzo had a fine year despite all the defensive attention he drew while Beetle (Brown) was great for a freshman. He played like he's been here for two years."

Minuteman Mutterings: The UMass story by hoop guru Bob Ryan ran in The Boston Globe on Tuesday under the headline, "Bleak scene in Amherst," how prophetic considering the 52-47 loss to Rutgers. . .Faces in the Crowd: Bertovich (who saw the renovated Cage for the first time and was impressed) and Rutgers athletic director Fred Gruninger. . .UM women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda received the national coach-of-the-year award from Metropolitan Life at halftime. .Rutgers had been 0-for-February before the game.

The referees (Hank Nichols, Jodi Sylvestri and Pete Pavia) are nationally-known and respected officials but did an awful job in the game. . .the Daily Hamsphire Gazette beat reporter hammered the Minutemen in his game story on Wednesday, as he has done all season.

Novak is chosen as assistant

As reported in the Collegian two weeks ago, Frank Novak has been named associate head football coach in charge of the offense for the University of Massachusetts football team.

Novak most recently was receivers coach of the USFL's Eastern Conference champion Birmingham Stallions as has also had coaching experience with Northern Michigan University, East Carolina, Virginia, Western Illinois Holy Cross as well as several high schools.

Novak was considered for the UMass head coaching job two years ago, but that position was filled by Bob Stull. After Stull left for Texas-El Paso on New Year's Eve, Novak and current head coach Jim Reid quickly became the two finalists for the position.

Reid's hiring of Novak will help placate Central Massachusetts fans who lobbied for his hiring as head coach because of his experience at Holy Cross (where he was offensive coordinator for the Lambert Cup winning Crusader teams in 1982 and 83) and Leominster High.

He was not selected because of where we coached however. Novak is considered one of college football's best offensive minds. He has been offered several professional assistants jobs in the NFL, but has decided to opt for the college game and the New England area.

"Frank is a good coach who will really help us out," said Reid. "I value his judgements and his ability. It's a major coup to have him on our staff."

Reid said yesterday that he will move to fill the other assistants positions left on the staff.

Six Smith students declare fast

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff and
DAN PERRIN
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON – Six Smith College students out of about 170 occupying the main administration building began an "indefinite" fast at noon yesterday to stress their dedication to the cause of divestment from South Africa, protesters said.

The students will go without solid food "until we gain some of the original goals of taking over College Hall" four days ago, said a participant in the sit-in, who asked to remain anonymous. They will consume water, fruit juice and a salt supplement to maintain health, the student said.

Mary M. Dunn, the president of Smith, could not be reached for comment last night, but the student said Dunn was very concerned about the fast and that she did not know how to react.

The student demonstrators have, however, opened lines of communication with Dunn and the college's Board of Trustees. During the previous two days they had refused to talk with the administration because they said their demands were known and there was nothing more to say.

"We feel they're coming around and we feel it's to our benefit to communicate," said the student.

The sit-in began Monday morning in response to a college Board of Trustees decision to divest only $1.75 million out of $22.3 million worth of stocks in companies that operate in South Africa. Three student-faculty groups have repeatedly called for total divestment.

At about 2:30 p.m. yesterday, demonstrators voted to consider ending their blockade of the building if there were a suspension of classes to hold teach-ins on apartheid, with trustees present, which would be planned and run by students and faculty. They also called for a meeting between trustees and representatives of three student-faculty divestment committees.

The protesters said they called for and were granted amnesty from disciplinary action against any faculty and students involved in the sit-in. They also demanded was that the college publish a booklet documenting the event.

No comment could be obtained yesterday afternoon from college officials on the most recent demands.

Yesterday afternoon, about eight students staged a spontaneous counter-demonstration outside the occupied building to voice concerns about the protesters' tactics.

"There are more opinions held than those in (College Hall)," said one student, disputing sit-in organizers' claim that 90 percent of Smith students supported total divestment.

Another counter-demonstrator said, "I'm angry that my individual rights are being hurt, meaning I can't get my transcripts from College Hall for business interviews and college applications." A third student complained that when she called Columbia University in New York to explain why she could not get a copy of her transcript, she was told they "didn't care."

Last night, students from the sit-in met with non-protesting students in dining halls to educate them about the divestment issue, to communicate their position and to hear students' concerns. However, the protesters denied this action was a result of the counter-demonstration.

Week honors women

International Women's Event next week

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

The struggles of women throughout the world will be honored next week by the International Women's Event at the University of Massachusetts.

The week will be celebrated by activities on campus March 3 through March 9, when the event will be capped off by members of the UMass community traveling to Washington D.C. to join in the March for Women's Lives.

Sarah Weddington, chief federal lobbyist for Texas, will give the keynote address Monday on "The International Women's Network."

"We wanted to have someone speak on a positive issue," said Cathy Sledz, the co-coordinator of the event. "Some people wanted to have a radical feminist speak," she said, but emphasized that the event is not only for women.

"Men aren't excluded," she said. "We're trying to get everyone involved."

Events planned for the week include a film festival, a panel discussion, and a play.

The celebration at UMass has its roots in International Women's Day, first proposed in 1911 by Clara Zetkin at the International Socialist Convention in Europe. Women workers were struggling to strike for safe working conditions and better pay; the event symbolizes that women are still struggling toward the same goals.

Events during the week are sponsored by such diverse groups as the Distinguished Visitors Program, Chabad House, Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, and the Commuter Area Government.

Divestment issue faced before

The controversy of whether to divest from companies doing business with operating in South Africa, now at its peak at Smith College in Northampton, is one that all of the five area colleges have faced.

The issue dates back nearly a decade at most colleges, where protests, if not divestment, were taking place. Hampshire College divested its $39,000 in such companies in 1977, the year the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted to divest its holdings. UMass divestment was not completed, however, until last summer, following student demonstrations and sit-ins in response to a report that found University money in firms affiliated with the apartheid nation.

Protest rallies also date back a decade at Amherst and Mount Holyoke colleges, two small private schools with multi-million dollar stocks in companies operating in South Africa. The protests peaked there last fall, and both boards of trustees adopted policies to begin divestment. Mount Holyoke pledged to completely divest those stocks, totaling $15 million, by 1987, while Amherst began a three-stage program.

Voting last October, the Amherst board promised to divest immediately from companies not abiding by the Sullivan Principles, a set of guidelines that promote racial equality in the workplace, and divest from companies only partially abiding by those rules by March 31 of this year. By that date, Amherst's divestment will total $10 million, or 35 percent of its total holdings in businesses that operate in South Africa; review of the remaining stocks, those in companies that fully abide by the Sullivan Principles, will take place in 1987.

RSOs react to proposed SGA budget

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

Members of some registered student organizations reacted with dismay yesterday to the proposed Student Government Association budget for fiscal year 1987.

The spending plan allocates no money for six campus groups deemed "political" by the SGA Budgets Committee. Last year the groups received an average of $724 apiece from the SGA. The committee presented the plan Wednesday night to the Undergraduate Student Senate.

"This budget act is grossly irresponsible," said Alex Guest, a member of the University Peacemakers and an assistant to the SGA co-presidents. His comment echoed the sentiments of participants in various clubs affected by the budget proposal.

Jennifer Brower, a member of the Lesbian Union, said, "I'm very upset we have no money. Where do these self-righteous individuals come along and all of a sudden say, 'we're not going to give money to these groups?'

"Groups such as LU do have expenses. Homophobia is a major problem on this campus. We need to do education. They're not giving us the money to do that," she said.

The Budgets Committee said the SGA needs to cut its budget to reduce an estimated $120,000 deficit in the Student Activities Trust Fund, and that the political groups are able to raise sufficient funds without SATF money.

Jordan Rosner, committee chairman, said, "The committee decided that [political groups] were not a priority in a year in which there wasn't much money to give out."

Monica Giaccoppi, a member of the Radical Student Union, said, "The student senate is a political group. The budget committee is a political group. To have a phone in this office costs $120 a year. If we have no money we can't afford it."

Other members of the RSU said they plan to do "whatever we can" to try to get the senate to pass an alternative budget.

"I feel like it's obvious that the budget committee is stacked with conservatives,' Giaccoppi said. 'They're trying to make it look like a non-partisan move. This is absurd.'

Rosner responded, "If they think we're a stacked right-wing committee, why is it that the only people to come in here and scream about [the budget] are the Republicans?"

Giaccoppi said, "None of the left-wing groups are going to get outside funding. The Republicans will, because they have lots of rich supporters," she added.

Brian Darling of the Republican Club said, "I don't think it's going to be easy for any group. I think it's sad that the student activities fund doesn't go to student activities."

Republican Club member Eric Ericson denied Republican groups would receive much funding from wealthy outside supporters: "The financial support of corporate sponsors is highly overrated."

Members of progressive groups are planning to prepare an alternative budget which includes funds for political organizations. Details of the proposal will be worked out in the next few days, but Guest said the aim was to prepare a budget that preserves "about 75 percent" of current funds for the groups.

Guest added that members of the affected groups will make an attempt to fill vacant senate seats before the senate begins debate on the budget next Wednesday.

Peace Corps 25 years old

By WILLIAM SPAIN
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow marks the 25th anniversary of President John F. Kennedy's Executive Order that created the Peace Corps, an idea which spurred a wave of volunteer spirit, particularly on college campuses.

Since 1961, the corps has sent 120,000 Americans to 91 countries to offer their services in health, nutrition, agriculture, forestry, education, vocational training, resource development, conservation and energy.

Kennedy sent the first group of 51 Peace Corps Volunteers off to Ghana on Aug. 30, 1961, with orders to "come back and educate us." Assigned to assist in secondary school programs, they were the first of many to dedicate several years of their lives to bettering the lot of people in the Third World while enriching their own.

Leona Lavallee, now a Peace Corps recruiter at UMass, spent two and one-half years in Togo and speaks highly of her experience there. "It makes you feel like you are a trans-cultural person. I made a lot of good friends," she said. "When you come back, you miss it as you miss home."

Her colleague, Lisa Sammet, agreed: "My time as a Peace Corps volunteer has been a major influence on my life ... it has helped me to direct my long-term goals." Sammet was a Peace Corps volunteer in the Ivory Coast for two years, teaching English in the village of M'Bahiakro.

Volunteers have gone on to make names for themselves in science, journalism, government and other fields. One made it as far as the US Senate -- Paul Tsongas, a Massachusetts Democrat.

Massachusetts currently ranks fifth among states in the number of Peace Corps volunteers, with 4500 residents passing through in the last 25 years. Recruiters at UMass have a quota of 31 to reach this year and say they are well on the way to reaching it, having signed up 23 new volunteers already.

There are currently 6,000 Peace Corps volunteers in the field in 60 nations spread across Latin America, Africa, Asia and the Pacific. President Reagan recently honored them and their predecessors, saying: "Volunteers have fought, and often conquered, illiteracy, hunger, poverty and illness in nearly 90 countries. Their efforts, dedicated to world peace through international good will, have done much to replace fear and mistrust with mutual understanding."

Aaron Lansky, middle, and Steven Marcus, right, present an 18th century Jewish book to Chancellor Joseph Duffey.

Yiddish book donated to UM

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

An 18th century book on Jewish history was presented yesterday to the University of Massachusetts as part of a 550-volume Yiddish literature collection in memory of a late dean and administrator.

In a dedication ceremony held in Memorial Hall, "Sefer Josippon," a rare volume dating from 1799, was donated by the National Yiddish Book Center as the centerpiece of books to the Joseph S. Marcus Yiddish Library Collection. Marcus was an engineering professor and administrator at UMass for 35 years and was president of the Yiddish book center in Amherst from 1982 to 1985.

The library collection, which will be held in the Tower Library upon renovations this spring, were selected by Hannah Kliger, assistant professor of Judaic Studies. The collection contains work on Yiddish prose, poetry and drama, and spans topics on history, criticism, social theory, Israel and Zionism, Yiddish theater, Hasidism, the Yiddish language, linguistics and related fields of study.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey began the dedication ceremony and described Marcus as "a very special citizen of this community." Duffey said Marcus invested his life in the University.

"Joe was always willing to talk to students about problems...he made an enormous contribution to this institution and community," Duffey said.

Penina Glazer, president of the Yiddish Book Center, said in a presentation speech that "For Jews books are sacred objects...the project of saving and restoring Yiddish literature is very special to Jews." Noting that 400,000 books have been recovered and distributed nationwide to the center, Glazer said the National Yiddish Book Center wants to keep Yiddish literature alive by stocking the shelves of universities with rescued books.

Because of Marcus' committment to the center, Glazer said, "We are proud to establish one of our first literary collections to the University of Massachusetts."

Steven Marcus, Marcus' son, said the dedication to Yiddish culture and history his father possessed was passed on, and this made his family aware of the other cultures which embody the American culture as a whole.

Aaron Lansky, executive director of the National Yiddish Library Collection, said, "Yiddish, the language of the common marketplace of Eastern Europe, has found a place at one of the great universities of America."

Lansky presented a facsimile of the bookplate for the "Sefer Jossipon" volume to Dot Marcus, wife of the late Dean Marcus.

BOG allots space to Union Video Center

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

After standing empty for almost a year, room 201 of the Student Union Building was assigned last night by the Campus Center Board of Govenors to be used by the Union Video Center as a viewing room.

According the the Union Video Center's proposal, a viewing monitor will purchased and couches will be put in the room so students can watch programs while sitting.

Presently there are two Video Center monitors in the Student Union Building, one next the Mini Store and the other outside of the Hatch. Students stand in order to watch a program.

"Making 201 into a lounge reduces the amount of people blocking traffic," said Kelley Morris, the production director of the Center.

The Video Center will use their monitor from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. to show their programs; after this they will allow other Registered Student Organizations to show programs, according to Micheal Gallo, of the Video Center.

The Board also voted last night to send the Republican Club a notice threatening to eliminate their space if they continue to harrass MassPIRG.

"People in the Replublican Club have made comments and statements personally harrassing MassPIRG," said Tom Butler, the space coordinator of the Board.

The Republican Club shares a room with MassPIRG and there is a five foot partician between the room. The two groups can't speak on the telephone or to other members without the other group hearing them.

Recently some members of the Republican Club have been harrassing members MassPIRG according to Butler. In addition to the harrassing comments, they have started debates with MassPIRG and disrupted their meetings by occuping the office with the intention of disturbing them.

SMOOTHING THE WAY – Jay Niedbala, a 4 year veteran at the Hadley Department of Public Works, fills in a pothole on Rocky Hill Road in Hadley.

Former barber dies at 73

A private funeral service will be held tomorrow for Nelson P. Major, for 51 years a haircutter in what is now the Campus Center Barber Shop, who died yesterday in his home after an illness. He was 73.

Mr. Major, who most recently lived on Bull Hill Road in Leverett, began working in the barber shop on campus in September 1933 and took over ownership of the private operation in 1945. He retired two years ago.

"I remember students coming in (to the shop) and he would see a family resemblance to their grandfather, who he knew, and he would call them by name. He remembered everybody," said Kevin Scanlon, an employee in the barber shop.

At the UMass commencement last May, Mr. Major was the second non-academic person to be awarded the Chancellor's Medal of Distinguished Service. He was also a one of the founding members of the Scholarship One Hundred Club, the group was responsible for donating money for scholarships for the University.

"He never missed a basketball or football game," said Ernest Paulin, who worked with Mr. Major for 37 years and now owns the barber shop.

He is survived by his wife, the former Mildred Norman; and two daughters, Joan Longtin, of South Deerfield, and Anita Pelis, of Leverett. He also leaves three brothers, Noel, Lenoard, and Norman Major, five grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

Calling hours will be held 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. today at Amherst Funeral Home. Burial will be in St. Brigid's Cemetery in Hadley.

Pulitzer winner discusses book

By ANITA L. ROYE and SHERYL L. JEAN
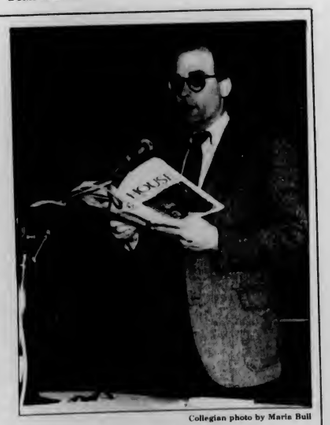
Collegian Staff

Pulitzer-prize winning local author Tracy Kidder read passages from his current best-seller House, to set the mood of his style of literary journalism, at a Campus Center lecture yesterday afternoon.

Literary journalism is a term used to describe the non-fiction style of writing and deemed by Kidder as "self-congratulatory."

Kidder began his career as a freelance writer for the Atlantic Monthly Magazine. Since then he has written two non-fiction works including The Soul of a New Machine, which received the Pulitzer Prize in 1982, and House, which has been on the New York best-seller list for 18 weeks.



Kidder writes narrative non-fiction with the emphasis on "non." He said that he doesn't invent dialogue or characters, but lets the narrative create itself.

"Real depth is hard to come by in non-fiction," Kidder said.

In House, he said he wanted to "create a stage for the reader and create a story of characters and natural observations."

House is a book about the carpenters' daily activities and the actual construction of a house on Bay Road in Amherst from start to finish.

Club sponsors Juggle-In

A member of the juggling club at the University of Massachusetts says he will not be surprised if 500 students turn out in the Student Union Ballroom today wanting to learn the skill of juggling.

"Out of a University with 20,000 people, it's a small percentage," said Jeremy Brown, the club's vice-president.

From 2 to 5 p.m. today, students will have the oppurtunity to attend the 'Juggle-In" and learn the art of juggling. The activity is being sponsored by the club to spark interest in the group and to raise its membership.

"Before I could juggle," Brown said, "I wasn't interested in juggling. But when it started coming together, I was really excited." He added that most students who attend today will have the same experience.

He said it should only take about a half an hour to learn how to juggle, but said, "I once saw a guy learn in five minutes."

Brown said he thinks juggling does not get the credit it deserves. "Its physically beneficial," he said. "I've never been a sports-minded person, but juggling is actually a physically demanding activity. It improves hand and eye coordination."

If the anticipated turnout does not show today, Brown said, "we still have the rest of the semester to get 500 people. We'll get more as time goes by."

women's movement" said Nancy Arnold, a staff assistant in the women's studies department at the University of Massachusetts.

Arnold is coordinating the delegation from the UMass area, which is sending three buses to Washington.

Arnold said that even before she knew how many buses would be sent down, she received more than 50 phone calls from people who wanted to go. She said she is confident that the buses will fill up.

March 10 will be a lobby day. Protesters hope to challenge the Reagan Administration's interpretation of title nine in the Civil Rights Restoration Act.

Title nine prohibits sex discrimination in "any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance."

The Reagan administration has interpeted the meaning of the act to prohibit particular programs from receiving federal funds, not entire institutions, as it was earlier interpeted.

"It's important to let people know where we stand on this issue," said Meanette Vermes, president of the greater Springfield chapter of NOW. "We're urging everyone who can to go because we have never really had a march on this issue" she said.

The bus will leave UMass March 8 and return early March 10. Further information is available by calling 545-1922 or 545-2661.

★ Kidder

"It's a book about ordinary people, rather a homey tale," he said.

Kidder said he found a "menage a trois without sexual connotations" relationship existing between the house owners, the carpenters and the architects.

To get a sense of the characters and the setting, Kidder was at the construction site nearly every day for a year.

Kidder said he wanted to write about carpenters partly because he is a "bumbling carpenter" himself and partly because nobody had written on that subject before.

Many non-fiction authors write in the first person form, such as Tom Wolfe, Mark Kramer and John McPhee; but Kidder used the third person in the book because he "thought it was the right way to tell the story."

"First-person belongs in writing memoirs and autobiographies," he said.

Kidder said there are a few options for beginning journalists such as writing for a small newspaper or freelancing.

His advice to those aspiring to a freelance career is "don't do it."

However, he added, "If you really want to do it you'll do it anyway."

Taking a stand

The anti-apartheid sit-in at Smith College enters its fifth day today. The self-described "hardcore" protesters who are the backbone of the College Hall occupation should be commended for their perseverance, and for making clear that a half-hearted trustee gesture toward divestment is unacceptable.

Last weekend the college's Board of Trustees voted to get rid of $1.75 million worth of stocks in two companies that do business in South Africa. Smith has investments in at least 23 such companies, totaling $22.3 million. The trustees rationalized their rejection of student and faculty demands for total divestment by noting that the other firms had signed the Sullivan Principles, guidelines for US companies that employ black South Africans.

The principles call for affirmative action hiring, integrated workplaces and good working conditions for blacks. But they have ceased to be effective in fighting apartheid, since any investment in South Africa ultimately props up the racists in Pretoria. Even Rev. Leon H. Sullivan, who devised the guidelines in 1977, has acknowledged this.

Mary Maples Dunn, president of the college, is clearly torn as to how to respond to the sit-in. "I'm living one day at a time and that's all I'm willing to say," she said Wednesday. She would not support the student's demands that the trustees divest completely, other than to commend their "commitment to this cause," according to the Smith public relations office, but so far she has not called in the police.

The Sullivan Principles excuse is invalid. The trustees should take an unequivocal stand against apartheid by selling the rest of the college's stocks in companies that operate there. Dunn would do well to get off the fence and urge that this happen immediately.

The women camping out in the administration building have demonstrated their concern for where their college's money goes and for the morality of Smith's position on apartheid. But also not to be overlooked is the contribution they have made to the movement for women's rights by undertaking the protest by themselves and carrying it through.

Letters from the editor

Larry Bouchie

From the "blame it on the computer" department-- the cause of the Collegian's computer problems (which have especially plagued us lately) has been discovered. It seems that our coffee maker and dorm-size refrigerator were plugged into the same electrical outlet as the computer system. The power surges and lapses from these appliances were interrupting the power flow into our computers. Now we have to make an executive decision-- do we get rid of the computers, or the coffee and refrigerator?

Personally, I missed last week's episode of the Cosby Show, but I've been told that Cosby's character son, Theo, was sporting a UMass sweatshirt. I love national exposure-- maybe whoever sent that shirt to Theo could mail a couple more to David Letterman and Johnny Carson.

Admittedly, the following information was selectively leaked to me, but it seems a certain special interest senator last spring spent student monies on a watch, a pen set, and briefcases among other things. On top of that, the authorizing signature for that purchase, which is supposed to be from a different person than the one who made that purchase, is the same person who purchased the items. So much for fiscal checks and balances.

Maybe I'm just in a good mood, but for the first time ever, I must begrudge some credit to President Reagan for his admittedly faltering but ultimately humane directives to nudge Ferdinand Marcos out of office. The transition appears to have been effected with a minimum of bloody conflict and no direct military intervention by the United States.

In the face of other disastrous options that Reagan had, somehow he and his advisors muddled through a Third World fiasco without beating everyone over the head and installing a true puppet regime. Now, if we can only keep our hands out of the Philippines until Aquino and company work on the problems of the Filipino people.

UMass in the news; a brief laudatory letter to the Globe editor this week from the president of Monsanto opined that sometimes it takes an outsider to appreciate the research that goes on here. I'll buy that, but why then don't our legislators understand or support our budget requests?

Similarly, Globe sports writer Bob Ryan wrote a huge piece in Tuesday's edition pointing out UMass and its basketball program are forgotten and unappreciated by the sports junkies in this state. It's good to know that some well placed people in this state not only haven't forgotten us, but are also willing to go out of their way to drum up a little support for the University.

Liberating our money away

Herb Ramy

There is a group on this campus whose only goal is liberation. The money from our pockets is the entity they intend to liberate. This group is strong, and they choose to fight using guerilla tactics and lightning fast raids where you never see the face of your enemy. The only thing left behind to prove that they were ever there is a small, rectangular, yellow piece of paper under your windshield wiper. You know them as ticket police, I prefer to call them leaches bearing badges from the parking office.

The origins of these people are shrouded in mystery, but one thing is for certain. Their ability to catch one unaware is almost magical in nature.

Case in point; it was the last day of the add/drop period, and the registrar's office was about to close. I made it to Whitmore in my car with mere minutes to spare. Not being able to find a space, I double-parked. A quick scan of the area told me that the coast was momentarily clear. I jumped from my car and sprinted into Whitless. I dropped off my form and sprinted back outside. The entire transaction didn't take more than eight seconds. When I made it back to my car, I found that I'd been hit badly. A $10 ticket for obstructing traffic. The most unnerving thing, though, was that my attacker was not to be found. Instead I heard a maniacal laugh coming from somewhere behind the SBA.

Strangely, everything on campus seems to be geared towards these rent-a-cops. Have you ever noticed that the parking meters surrounding the bus loop are the only ones on campus with only an hour limit? It's no coincidence that our Tuesday/Thursday classes are an hour and fifteen minutes long.

I wouldn't feel so bad if I knew that the money was going to something worthwhile. I realize that the ticket says parking scholarship fund, but have any of you received money from this mythical pot of gold? I know I haven't, and I'm one of the funds biggest contributors. So, if none of us get this money, where does it go? Have you ever noticed how nice Chancellor Duffy's home is looking recently?

As far as the tickets themselves go, I guess that the violations they represent are for the most part valid, but on occasion this isn't so. Recently a friend of mine received a ticket when he was parked in a perfectly legal spot, so he decided to dispute it. That was a week ago, and I haven't heard from him since.

Although the battle must go on, I, for one, have been forced to surrender. Recently, while parked in what I thought to be a perfectly legal spot, I was towed. Not being able to afford one more ticket, much less a towing fee, I've decided to let Amherst Motors keep my baby. Maybe someday something good will come of all this. Hell, maybe I'll even win a parking office scholarship.

Dr. Abdul Mohammed Babu

US of Africa expected

Starvation in African nations is not completly caused by drought or other problems, but because Argiculture is completly ignored in many African countries,said a former economic minister of Tanzania, Wednesday.

Dr. Abdul Mohammed Babu, Former Economic Minister of Tanzania addressed an audience of 56 people in the Emily Dickenson Hall speaking on the issue of Political Crisis in the Horn and Southern Africa.

There has been too much concentration been placed on production for exportation rather than for usage in these countries, Babu said.

Babu was a revolutionary freedom fighter before Tanzania gained its independence in 1962. Being involved with the struggle for liberation, Babu was imprisoned by the British for Seventeen months.

Babu said that his government was advised to concentrte on "Import Substitution Industry' a technique used in manufacturing your own commodities such as beer and tobacco instead of importing.

He said "If you wanted a loan from a bank to establish a machine tool industry, you would be denied such loan. On the other hand if you would have use the same loan to build an investment corporation, your request would be granted even without credit reference."

"Such method is used to make the economy more dependent", Babu said.

A developed economy is one in which agriculture and industry supports each other, according to Babu. "As a result of political instability and because of excessive indebtness, no country can develop independently," Babu said.

Confidently Babu said that within the next twenty years, he believes that there will be a United States of Africa.

Babu served as Visiting Professor at Amherst College in the early 1980's before returning to Africa. He now works as a journalist for Pacific News Service in London England.

The lecture was sponsored by Orchard Hill residential College, Social Thought and Political Economy department and the Office of Third World Affairs.

Patrick Ewing faces court battle

BOSTON- (AP) Patrick Ewing of the New York Knicks reportedly is being sued for child support in Massachusetts. In a complaint filed Wednesday in Middlesex Superior Court in Cambridge, Sharon Stanford sought temporary and continuing support from the National Basketball Association star for his 1-year-old son, Patrick Ewing Jr.

"Patrick does not dispute this is his son," Henry F. Owens the third, a Boston attorney who represents Mr. Stanford, told Will McDonough, a sports columnist for The Boston Globe. "But we have not been able to work out anything that is near to being fair with either Patrick of his attorney.

"We had no choice but to go to court. It really is a shame we had to take this action."

According to the complaint, Ms. Stanford became pregnant on or about Aug. 18, 1983, as a result of relations with Ewing and gave birth to Patrick Ewing Jr. on May 20, 1984.

Ms. Stanford and Ewing were never married, and the complaint says Ewing encouraged Ms. Stanford to carry the child to term.

The complaint alleges Ewing promised Ms. Stanford to pay medical expenses and support the child, but since then has contributed "nominal funds."

The complaint does not request a specific amount of support, but Owens said said it "will be amended in the near future to include the figures."

AIDS spreads in Africa

Prostitutes possible link

An epidemic of AIDS in Central Africa has begun to spread to at least one East African nation, possibly through men having sex with prostitutes, a study recently said.

Working at two clinics in Nairobi, Kenya, an international team of physicians tested the blood of 90 female prostitutes and 40 men treated at a clinic for sexually transmitted diseases. They found antibodies for the deadly AIDS virus in the blood of 50 prostitutes and three of the men.

"To limit the spread of this serious disease in Africa, there is an urgent need to initiate public health education programs directed at modifying sexual behavior and limiting sexual contact with persons in high risk populations,"the researchers wrote in the New England Journal of Medicine. Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which attacks the body's immune system, has been well documented in Central African nations such as Zaire and Rwanda since the 1970s, but only a few cases of the AIDS virus have been reported in Kenya.

"The high prevalence of (the AIDS virus) antibody among the prostitutes was a surprising finding in the view of the paucity of cases of overt AIDS diagnosed in Kenya," the researchers said.

Few actual cases of aids have been found in Kenya, but taking into consideration the long incubation period for the illness, a large number of new cases can be expected, the study predicted.

"We suspect that overt cases of AIDS may have been appearing within the prostitute population in the near future," the authors said.

The real reason for the spread of the disease is unknown, but the researchers speculated it was due to men having sex with prostitutes, transmitting it to other prostitutes and to other women.

"The implications of an epidemic of AIDS virus infection in Kenya are sobering. If urban prostitutes constitute a major reservoir of AIDS virus in such African capitals...we may expect that the virus will continue to be spread throughout the African continent by hetrosexual men serving as vectors of infection from one community to another.

Test your knowledge of black history

With Black History Month approaching the downside of the clock, let us not forget those great achievements made by individuals whom we recognize throughout this month.

Here are some questions to test your knowledge of black history! Lets see how well you do! Don't peek at the answers following:

1. Name the black woman who became the first Black Miss America. 2. Name the black woman who replaced her as Miss America when she was forced to relinquish her crown. 3. What black man won an Oscar for his performance in the movie, "An Officer and a Gentleman"? 4. Who wrote the book, "Autobiography of Miss Jane Pitman?" 5. Who popularized the Back to Africa movement?

6. Who was the first president of Howard University? 7. What civil rights organization publishes the Crisis Magazine? 8. What black man was appointed to President Lyndon Baines Johnson's cabinet? 9. Jesse Jackson gained worldwide recognition when he successfully negotiated the release of... 10. Daniel Hale Williams is noted for his medical feats with what human organ? 11. What medical researcher is known for his work with blood plasma? 12. Who wrote the best seller Roots?

Hope you enjoy this quiz.

Reagan budget hurts

President Reagan's fiscal 1987 budget, if enacted by Congress, would sharply reduce or even eliminate social programs which have benefited American blacks.

Throughout the country, black youth are suffering under educational oppression as public schools continue to come under attack. In most instances black students are disproportionately higher in dropouts, school absences, school disciplinary actions and yet lower in standardized reading and math scores as well as male high school graduates.

Among the programs Reagan would substantially cut or eliminate is a work incentive program which has helped welfare recipients get off welfare through job training.

Education programs President also propose to study the restructuring of a wide range of housing subsidy, school lunch and social service programs.

Black Greeks pull for power

Members of the Council of Presidents -- a consortium of presidents from the eight black Greek-lettered fraternal organizations – met recently and hammered out a Convention Bill of Specifications..

According to this dictum, member societies will use their collective clout to assure that sites where conventions are held are accountable to black aspirations at every level of economic spectrum including employment, corporate contributions, use of black-owned banks and use of professional services.

Members also pledged to offer a similar "litmus test" to airlines and hotels constantly deployed for their respective travel needs.

In attendance at the meeting were the national presidents of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, and Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority; and of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Kappa Alpha Psi and Omega Psi Phi Fraternities.

Chairwoman of the Council; Faye B. Bryant indicated that members of the organizations are moving to parlay their economic power when considering that research reveals that blacks spent $2.5 billion in 1985 attending conventions. Of this figure, Greek letter fraternal organizations--with a collective membership of 500,000--spent a disproportionate amount hosting their respective conventions. She projected that by the year 2000, that figure is expected to climb to $5 billion.. She further noted that there are 29 million black Americans with an aggeregate estimateed income of $203 billion and that by the year 2000, it is expected to double to $406 billion.

"With this type of economic leverage, blacks can flex their muscles and wage a campaign to make host cites where we spend all of these dolllars accountable to our need, declared Bryant.

"Through such a power initiative, blacks can significanlty impact the economic plight of blacks and put convention sites on notice that if they want our dollars, they must be prepared to accomodate our needs," she continued.

Specifically, when confirming a meeting site, the litmus test that will determine whether the site will be considered will also consider:

- Number and level of black and minority employees;
- Number of blacks on board of directors;
- Percentage of blacks and minority suppliers, vendors and contractors.

Paper towels, suspicious minds as Sandra Bernhard wows Smith

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Even comedienne Sandra Bernhard couldn't ignore the Smith College divestment sit in. Near the close of her hour-long one woman show last night at the Smith Davis Center, Bernhard managed to work in a stinging lyric about oppressive South Africa in her version of "Love Train."

Bernhard's new show, introduced as "Mighty Real, Part I -- a work in progress," alternated between her unique renditions of popular songs and her wry, sometimes scattered humor.

"Sometimes I feel so paranoid, I get scared. Then I don't feel paranoid anymore, and that makes me really scared," Bernhard joked, "Sometimes my paranoia is so real -- mighty real. But tonight I want more, like Miami Vice. And sometimes, I'm just suspicious."

By the time she reeled off this opening patter and segued into the Elvis Presley classic, "Suspicious Minds," Bernhard and the audience of over 250 people had settled in for some fun, and fun they had.

Aided only by musician Mitch Kaplan, Bernhard punched out jokes with an insecure indifference that worked. Speaking of a Los Angeles restaurant, she noted there wasn't just salt and pepper on the table, "But cummin seed, which I love to put on everything. And those red hot chili peppers? Just the thing to clear out your palate."

"I just got back from Nicaragua, where we opened up the first Espirit store," Bernhard ejected, referring to the clothing line and whipping out a glossy Espirit brochure. She then went on to make fun of the vacuous comments offered by the various people who worked for Espirit. "This girl says she enjoys food, boys, and riding motor scooters. She is so eclectic."

Bernhard also referred to the inevitable, Oscar de la Rente designs for Barbie dolls -- "It gives me a whole lot more confidence." As for the perfume strips inserted in Vogue magazine, "They drive me crazy....I'd like to order a dozen and send them to my enemies -- stinky shit."

Bernhard then introduced the prize prop of the evening, Diane Von Furstenberg paper towels. "Who knows more about kitchen cleanup than Diane Von Furstenberg?"

Sandra Bernhard performed her unusual combination of humor and song last night at Smith College.

"I just want to be cool at any cost. I just wanna snort heroin and not give a shit. I wanna take Ecstasy and talk, talk, talk, talk.....but I feel bad for John Denver....he had to go to Washington and defend 'Rocky Mountain High.'"

Student Union Gallery shows off Art students

By JENNIFER ACKERMAN
Collegian Staff

I feel like such a slug. I didn't get to the Student Union Gallery until yesterday to see the exhibit of B.F.A. and B.A. student works. The work has been exhibited for the past two we? closing reception is today from 3 - 4 p.m.

It's always interesting to see what kind of work is being produced through the Art department, and from what I gather, it's great. Lots of students present their work in the show, with mediums ranging from photography to bronze sculpture.

Jennifer Reece has a few intriguing photographs on display. "Cows" is a composite of the same photo placed at different angles which gives the piece a kaliedescope effect.

My favorite piece is Elizabeth Keating's woodcut of a mother embracing a child in a garden setting. The couple are being constricted by a huge serpent, but still relay a dignified pathos.

Another great piece is an untitled bronze sculpture of a bird (chicken?) by Joe P. Aichdee. The texture and gesture are interesting and strange. Caroline Gould's bronze sculpture, "Philosopher's House" has just as much character as Aichdee's, but with a woven and airy quality to the weighty medium.

Liane Noddin's drawings have a freedom and weightlessness to the quality of the line and color--quite a contrast to Lisa Bohne's "Life in the U.S." Bravo. This piece is great; a blatant reflection of the military's role in the American "image." Another political work by Jane C. Funke shows us an interesting twist of words on an American flag.

An interesting little series of ceramic sculpture by Mariana Rilleau gives us a bird's eye view of three fantasy theatres.

Go check this show out today on your way home from class, and see what's shakin' in the UMass Art department.

Arts Notice

Now's the Time is a multi-media arts festival planned for early May which seeks interested people from the community to help with planning, public relations, production and pertinent other preliminary tasks.

Now's the Time is being organized by Larry Berger, a local musician and arts administration student who has been working on the concept of an arts festival since last fall semester.

The prospects for the festival are limited only by those who chose not to participate; so far, in addition to local bands and musicians who will perform, sculptors, craftspeople, dramatists, visualists and an array of other local talent will be featured.

Rain or shine. Now's the Time will roll on, and it's not too late to join in the planning for what promises to be an enjoyable event for all. For more information, call Larry at 256-1602. --

West Point next weekend. If the Minutemen successfully knock off the Cadets, who are currently fourth in the EIGL, they will have a good chance of finishing fourth in the league after the champoinships.

"If we beat Army this week, and take them next week at the EIGL championships," said UMass asststant coach Ken Dougherty, "we will finish 4th in the league. That would be very respectable."

On the women's front the 3-6 Minutewomen will go against a less than mediocre Rutgers line-up. "If we hit the routines the way we are supposed to," said UMass head coach Chuck Sheibler, "we should have no problem."

The Minutewomen are coming off a whole weeks rest and all appear to be healthy with the exception of tri-Captian Tricia Harrity who is still hindered by an ankle injury.

The team is also scoring much higher than in the past, last week scoring higher than at any point of the 1985 season.

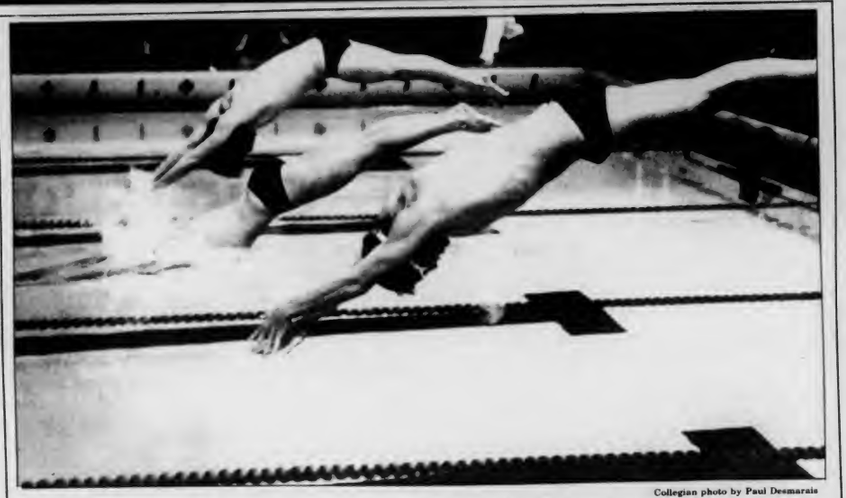
UMass women now have to wait

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The waiting game has begun.

The 10-16 University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, concluding its regular season schedule with a 67-57 victory over George Washington, Saturday at the Cage, must await the outcome of the Atlantic-10's final weekend before its opponent for next week's A-10 tournament is determined.



The Minutewomen, 4-12, are currently mired in eighth place in the c in eighth place in the conference, above the lowly Duchesses of Duquesne and need the help of nationally-ranked Penn Staqte University in order to avoid a playoff game with Duquesne before the A-10 tournament begins.

The situation is as follows: At 4-12, UMass is the only team that has completed its schedule within the conference while the remaining A-10 teams finish their conference schedule this weekend. Currently, the Minutewomen are in eighth place in the nine-member conference with George Washington in seventh place, a half-game ahead of UMass.

According to the A-10 playoff format, the eighth and ninth placed team's are scheduled to meet in the tournament-opening first-round game, Wednesday night at West Virginia University. As it stands now, the Minutewomen would play Duquesne, with the winner advancing to the quarterfinals to take on eighth-ranked Rutgers University (24-2 and 15-0 in the conference).

Should George Washington lose to 16th-ranked Penn State at Penn State, however, GW would lose its advantage over the Minutewomen and find itself in a tie for seventh place. The two teams would then flip a coin to determine who would occupy the suddenly coveted seventh place with the loser dropped into the eighth position.

Minutewomen Mischief: Freshman forward Beth Wilbor, this week's A-10 Freshman of the Week, has been sick for the past few days and reportedly missed the last team practice. Wilbor averaged 12.6 points-per-game with 7.5 rebounds and 3.0 assists-per-game in three a-10 games last week. . . Sophomore center Sue Burtoft will be missed in the tournament due to a broken finger which has kept her out of action. . .Senior forward Jerrie Bernier was one of seven players nominated for this week's A-10 Player of the Week award. . . Also, senior guard Barbara Hebel has brought her scoring average up to 13.08 points-per-game, putting her in 12th place overall. Her 14.73 average in A-10 games is good enough for eighth place in conference scoring.

Swimmers' goal now in sight

Donovan leads Minutemen into New England title meet

By JOE ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

This is not just another meet for the University of Massachusetts men's swim team.

From day one, UMass swim coach Russ Yarworth has preached about this big meet. When a perfect 11-0 dual meet season was clinched, he said, "An undefeated season is great but, an even dozen is what we want." He was talking about this weekend's New England Championship meet at Springfeild College.

When goals were discussed at the beginning of the season, the word undefeated was hardly heard as Yarworth said, "Being undefeated would be nice but we don't talk about that, it's the New England Championship we want. We have a good chance this year."

Do they ever. Just ask any other swim coach in New England. "Everybody says we're the favorite." Believe it or not, the Minutemen realize this meet isn't going to be given to them.

All year long in the dual meets swimmers like senior co-captain Drew Donovan and junior John Turner have won their events. Although they haven't carried the team, their points have more than helped. "When the other coaches perceive UMass, they see these two stars and that's not how to win a meet. You need 18 swimmers. Even if John and Drew win their events that's only a hundred points, a team will need 450 to 460 to win the meet," Yarworth said.

"The key to this meet will be the kids that are ranked 15 and 16 to be in the top 12. We also need to perform well in our strengths, the freestyle events. Four or five people need to get points in the 500 and mile freestyle events," Yarworth explained.

The Minutemen need this depth because there are other teams looking to knock off the top seed. According to Yarworth, Williams is UMass' toughest competitor. "It will be a real battle between Tufts, the University of Connecticut, Southern Connecticut, and Williams. Williams is the team to beat," Yarworth said.

"Williams has the same swimming philosophy as we do. I think they're the favorite. They've been in this position before and won the title seven out of the last eight years. They work hard then taper at the end of the season. They have a lot of depth and they have a good coach." Yarworth said.

And if UMass wins? "I'll probably do a backflip then get on the phone and do some recruiting. Seriously, it will show the kids that they can set a goal and reach it. I'm sure everyone realizes they could have worked harder, you can always work harder," Yarworth said.

For some this is their last meet of their career, Donovan and diver Pat Mullen head a list of seniors that includes other key members such as Paul McDonough, John Stalker and Marc Surette. According to Yarworth, Surette has a good shot of repeating part on the All-Academic Atlantic 10 team.

If they should happen to lose, "I won't shoot myself. It doesn't take away from anything they have already accomplished. It's a learning experience but the bottomn line is to have fun," Yarworth said.

There isn't any key event that if UMass wins they'll clinch the meet. "like they guy said, "It ain't over till the fat lady ings." You can be up 50 points one day and have a swing of 100 by the end of the day. The points fluctuate because there is six events every day."

The final notes before the meet: "Things are shaping up real well," Yarworth said forgetting about any injuries or colds. "Everyone is psyched, there are a lot of crew-cuts around here," Yarworth added.

The following is a three-day schedule of the events. The relay line-ups aren't set yet.

Day One

500 Freestyle - Donovan, Chris Payson, Rick Bishop, Jim Flannery, and Mark Waters.

200 Indivdual Medley - Turner, Mike Hoover, Peter Chouinard, McDonough, and Surette.

50 Freestyle - Jim Kuhns, Mike Bolles, Scott Kessler, and Hannenian.

400 Medley Relay - Turner, Fred Marius, Ed Burton, and Kuhns.

One-meter diving - Mullen.

UMass gymnasts on the road

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's gymnastics teams will both be away this weekend with the Minutemen going down to West Point to take on the Cadets, and the Minutewomen traveling to New Jersey to challenge Rutgers.

The Minutemen, 7-5 on the season, will have their hands full with the Army team that UMass head coach Roy Johnson says "Has a potent line-up."

"It should be a tough one," Johnson went on to say. "If we score the way we should, but haven't of late, we will take the meet."

That "potent" Cadet line-up is highlighted by top all-arounder Jeff Baum. Baum has consistently scored in the mid 50's in his past performences, averaging over 9.0 per event.

UMass will counter Baum with their own potential secret weapon in Roberto Weil. Although Weil has been in a slump of late, if he breaks through with a consistent all-around effort UMass would have a good chance of winning.

This is also a more important match for the Minutemen than it seems. The Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Champoinships will be held at

SAFA off on annual D.C. pilgrimage

[illegible] Massachusetts delegation and other key members of Congress.

On past trips, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., has addressed the group on the floor of the House chamber. This is O'Neill's last term before he retires from public office and the group hopes to meet with him.

SAFA intends to focus its efforts on the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction plan, which became law three years ago. Under the law, an estimated 600,000 college students may face losing all federal aid.

Between 60 and 70 percent of U Mass students are supported by some form of financial aid.

The law aims to reduce the federal deficit, now estimated at more than $200 billion dollars, by a set amount each year through slashing the budget so that it will be balanced by 1991.

Eighty to 90 percent of these kids can talk about their own situations and that's effective," Grady said.

Dallas Martin, executive director for the National Association of Financial Aid Administrators here, part of the financial aid lobbying network, outlined the group's strategy.

"One of the best ways of letting congressmen know how you feel is to get people to talk to them," Martin said. "Active students can do a far better job of saying 'here is my situation.'"

This afternoon, SAFA is slated to meet with Anne Wexler, of the lobbying firm Wexler, Harrison, Reynolds and Scanlon. Wexler, who is married to UMass Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, will offer the group lobbying advice.

The group, which also includes two Westfield State College students and three University administrators, will also meet with U.S. Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Pittsfield, who is challenging the constitutionality of the deficit-reduction law.

The trip has been financed by Student Government and administration funds.

SAFA left Amherst by bus at 12:30 a.m. Sunday and arrived here eight hours later.

Accord ends Smith sit-in but 20 continue fast

By DANIEL KING
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON—Smith College students have reached an agreement with school officials and yesterday about 200 of them ended a sit-in of College Hall six days after they occupied the administration building to protest the college's South African investments, but 20 students are continuing a fast that began last Thursday.

"Who would have thought that 200 women, agreeing to commit an act of civil disobedience in the name of a free South Africa, would ignite a campus-wide movement that has inspired people across the nation," Kelly Gerald, a junior government major said at a rally and press conference yesterday outside College Hall.

Standing arm in arm, the protesters sang songs and gave victory speeches to about 300 people as three students carried a black basket through the audience.

Students had been meeting with Smith President Mary M. Dunn and Board of Trustees Chairwoman Euphemia Steffey since Thursday, discussing proposals students had made addressing the issue of racism in South Africa, and the college's investment policies toward companies operating there.

The points of agreement include:

- A voting majority of trustees will meet and deliberate the student-faculty Ethical Investment Committee's total divestment proposal and the board's current investment policy. The meeting will take place in the spring before the next scheduled board meeting of May 2.
- A subcommittee of eight trustees will meet Thursday with three pro-divestment student faculty groups to create an ongoing committee which will address the college's investment policies in South Africa.
- The trustees will recognize the need for more dialogue with the Smith community and meet more frequently to discuss college issues.
- Classes will be cancelled Thursday to allow a mandatory teach-in, directed by students and faculty and attended by some trustees, on divestment, apartheid and other issues.
- Amnesty from any disciplinary action was granted to anyone who participated in the sit-in.
- A booklet documenting the sit-in will be published by the protesters and paid for by the college.

On Feb. 22, the trustees announced plans to divest $1.75 million of $22.3 million it has invested in 25 companies with ties to South Africa. The two corporations whose stocks were to be sold, IMS International and United States Steel, had not signed the Sullivan Principles, guidelines for firms

Plaintiff calls language waiver procedure unfair

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

The process of appealing for a waiver of the University of Massachusetts' foreign language requirement is unfair and inefficient, according to a student who has filed a lawsuit against the University.

The plaintiff, Carole Reis, a senior from Sturbridge, said that because she has dyslexia, she applied to the Learning Disabilities Hearing Board for a waiver from Spanish classes in September. The board did not make a decision until Jan. 23, when it ruled Reis would have to audit Spanish 120 while on internship in Philadelphia this spring and complete the last two required courses in the fall, Reis' last semester before graduation.

The class action suit on behalf of dyslexic students was filed in U.S. District Court in Springfield. It charges that the University has violated federal regulations intended to help students with disabilities.

Reis said she was not allowed to appear before the board in person.

"You don't know who is on the board, you don't get to meet them physically, and you don't have any say," she said. "They don't want to give waivers because if they give them to dyslexic students, everyone in the College of Arts and Sciences will try to get a waiver. They are being very difficult."

She emphasized that she did not expect to be exempted from the language credits, but rather wanted to take a linguistics course or a course in the history of Spain. She said it is unrealistic for her to be expected to complete two semesters of Spanish in the fall.

"I've already forgotten the two lower levels," Reis said. When I walk out of the class, I can't retain anything."

Reis also said one member of the board told her her internship was "bad timing," and that she should consider going to Puerto Rico in order to reach the level of proficiency required. By the time the decision was made, however, Reis had already planned her internship at a stadium management company in Philadelphia.

Jay Melrose of the communications disorders department, who is on the board and was involved in the decision in Reis' case, said that the board waits until it has two or three cases to decide before it meets. "I understand the student's need for quick action, but it should be understood that it is difficult to get five people from different departments together. It's a board that meets when it has some cases to decide," he said.

Paul Appleby of Handicapped Student Affairs said that if students have a learning disability, they can apply for a modification of the language requirement through his office.

A student who wishes the requirement to be modified takes his or her case to the Learning Disabilities Hearing Board, with Appleby acting as advocate, which makes one of three recommendations to the provost's office: that there is no cause for modification; that the manner in which the language is taught be modified; or that courses be substituted for the language classes.

Melrose said that implementation of the board's decision, after approval by the provost's office, is delegated to someone in the affected department or school. He said James Shaw, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, and Harlan Sturm of the Spanish and Portuguese department worked out the details in consultation with Reis.

Shaw said he could not discuss the lawsuit because the Mass. may return to two plates

BOSTON (AP)—Law enforcement officials have renewed their call for a return to front license plates on all passenger cars in Massachusetts, saying the extra plate would help them track down suspects who flee from the scene of the crime.

The Massachusetts Chiefs of Police Association, joined by the Massachusetts State Police Association, has urged the Legislature to provide up to $3.5 million to pay for front plates for the 3 million passenger vehicles in the state.

"The vast majority of police officers support the concept of the two plates. Mainly it's for identification in robberies and other crimes—obviously, you can see a vehicle coming towards you as well as leaving," said Auburn Chief Robert F. Johnson, president of the police chief's association.

With Gov. Michael S. Dukakis pushing to have all rear license plates replaced with a red-white-and-blue motif in the next several years, now would be "an ideal time" for Massachusetts to join 33 others that use two plates, Johnson said.

Massachusetts had a two-plate system until 10 years ago, when the state eliminated the front plate for passenger cars as a money-saving move during a state budget crisis. Commercial vehicles and those with vanity plates still have two markers.

The police chiefs have filed similar two-plate bills in recent years but failed to win approval, largely due to the cost. Last year, the measure was approved by the Legislature's Public Safety Committee but died in the House Ways and Means panel, according to Sen. William Keating, Senate chairman of the public safety panel.

Carcinogen discovered in Fla. cocaine

WASHINGTON (AP)—Half of the cocaine seized in Florida late last year contained benzene, a carcinogen that has been banned from consumer products because it has been shown to cause leukemia, a federal official said yesterday.

"We see the potential as extremely dangerous for lung damage or worse," said Robert H. Feldkamp, a spokesman for the Drug Enforcement Administration.

The agency in January asked the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta to evaluate the possible effects of benzene used in manufacturing cocaine "before we put all the red flags out that people who use cocaine may be in danger. We have not yet determined that," Feldkamp said in a telephone interview.

The CDC study is expected in April or May, he said.

Benzene began to show up in cocaine in early 1985 after the agency took steps to prevent illegal drug manufacturers from obtaining ether, previously a key chemical in making cocaine, Feldkamp said.

Six years ago, DEA officials determined that 98 percent of the ether being shipped to Colombia, one of the primary cocaine exporting countries, was going to drug traffickers, and only 2 percent to legitimate users.

Cocaine is processed with ether and other substances to make cocaine hydrochloride, the product reaching most users.

"It was unheard of to manufacture cocaine without ether," Feldkamp said.

The DEA, however, in its campaign to curb drug abuse, obtained the cooperation of ether manufacturers to limit the flow of the sustance to cocaine makers.

"We do know that despite the campaign, the supply of cocaine has not diminished. So it was necessary to find out what was being used instead," Feldkamp said.

In January 1985, DEA officials began testing confiscated cocaine to determine what was being used as a substitute, and test results increasingly showed benzene.

By last November and December, half of the cocaine seized in Florida contained benzene. Other samples had been processed with toluene, methyl ethyl ketone, and methylene chloride, which are not though to be as harmful as benzene.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission has banned the use of benzene in consumer products. It is used primarily in gasoline and in laboratories.

Dr. James L. Luke, former medical examiner for the District of Columbia, said studies have linked benzene to leukemia and other hemotological disorders as well as birth defects.

Dr. Sydney Wolfe, head of the Public Citizen Health Research Group, was quoted by the newspaper as calling benzene an "extremely potent carcinogen" that "has been known for two decades to cause leukemia in humans."

GE and union resume talks

LYNN (AP)—Union leaders and General Electric Co. officials resumed talks yesterday aimed at getting 3,700 employees at GE's sprawling aircraft engine plant back to work as the union threatened to escalate a 10-day-old strike if no progress was made.

"Everything's contingent on what happens today (Sunday)," said Barbara Sweeney, publicity director for Local 201 of the International Union of Electronic, Electrical, Technical, Salaried and Machine Workers.

Union shop stewards at GE plants in Everett and Medford voted last week to join the walkout against GE's Lynn aircraft engine and steam turbine plant on Monday if no significant progress was made in talks over the weekend.

Expansion of the strike could affect 1,500 workers at the Everett and Medford operations.

Union members at the Lynn plant walked off their jobs Feb. 21 to protest the company's policy for taking care of grievances and what they claimed was harassment of shop stewards.

Ms. Sweeney said lengthy bargaining sessions were held Friday and Saturday, but no substantial progress was reported.

"The two main issues remain unresolved," she said. "Both sides continue to define language."

Bill Kennedy, a company spokesman, disagreed.

"I think they were constructive and I think we've moved nearer to a settlement, but I don't think I'm in a position to make any predictions," he said.

The two sides, however, did agree to move negotiations from the Lynn plant to a neutral site. The union had requested a move to Lynn City Hall, but Ms. Sweeney said it settled for a site that she would not disclose.

They say the two major issues are the number of grievances awaiting company action and the need to clearly state who speaks for the company in grievances.

'Life in a fishbowl' —UMass life in the 80s

Last in a series: Campus life from the 1960s to the present.

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

Expanding the minds of students living on the University of Massachusetts campus is what Mary Tanchak says she likes most about her job.

Tanchak, residence director for the Hamlin-Knowlton-Crabtree Cluster in Northeast, says her role is as a "facilitator of development, helping the students to challenge themselves, to look at other lifestyles."

"Some students come in here very narrow-minded. They only know one lifestyle. Here they are getting in contact with a lot of people from various backgrounds of all kinds. They have to get acclimated to the variety," she said.

Residence director since 1983, Tanchak lives in Hamlin House, an all-male residence hall.

"I look at it as life in a fishbowl," she said. "You never leave the job."

One of the newer trends affecting residential life has been toward thematic housing, Tanchak said.

Clusters in Northeast have been oriented to various disciplines, depending on residents' interests. The Crabtree cluster houses mostly engineering students, with a computer center linked to the School of Engineering. Some classes are also held there.

"It gives students a choice. It's not forcing them to live somewhere. It's a unique population and if students want to take advantage of it, they're welcome to," Tanchak said.

Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, a Southwest resident in 1976 and now assistant to the vice-chancellor for student affairs, said residential education is becoming a growing part of campus life.

"There's a lot of different options that stress community building and being a part of an education within that residence," she said.

Tanchak said the courses taught in the residence halls provide a mutual benefit for both the professors and students, as it gives the faculty a chance to see what life in the residence halls is like, and makes going to classes more convenient for students.

Residential education is more than just academic, Tanchak said. She said the rise in the drinking age to 21 last year has produced new problems among many students in the residence halls.

"There's more hidden drinking. Students who have a tendency to develop a drinking problem or have a personal problem are going toward alcohol, and it's being hidden in their rooms," she said.

Tanchak said an effort among residence hall staff to promote alcohol awareness has ranged from distributing flyers, providing peer educators and sponsoring films. Last semester the cluster showed Don't Stop Until You Get Caught, a film about drinking problems, but attendance was "minimal."

"We often are limited in our interaction and our outreach to hidden drinkers, because if they're underage, they're fearful that they will be written up and punished, or they are just staying in their rooms and becoming closet drinkers, which is the fear we have," Tanchak said.

Wood burners may need licenses

By CARYN BOWERS
Collegian Staff

Harmful materials emitted from wood-burning stoves have prompted the town of Amherst to pass a law requiring residents to have a license for operating them.

Residents in Amherst will have to pass a written test, which is being designed by the Board of Health, in order to receive a license for operating a wood stove.

"The test is not very difficult, and is basically to be used as an educational tool," said Connie Peterson, a health educator for the Amherst Board of Health.

Peterson said questions on the test will be geared toward the most safe and efficient ways of operating a wood stove, and how to avoid pollution as much as possible.

"We expect that everyone will pass," Peterson said.

Organic pollutants, including carcinogens, are part of the smoke particles that come out of a stove's chimney. These pollutants are resinous materials that are not completely burned inside the stove.

"We don't know if people are breathing them in high enough concentration to cause a problem," said Salvatore DiNardi, professor of public health at the University of Massachusetts.

The harmful pollutants are caused when the wood is burned at too low a heat requiring less oxygen, which forces more unburned pollutants into the air. When a stove runs hot enough, pollutants burn up before reaching the air, thus emitting smoke at a safe enough level.

"It's almost like using a self-cleaning oven," DiNarde said. He added that the Environmental Protection Agency is developing new performance standards for wood stoves, but they will not be official until 1988.

"I think there has to be nationwide support of regulation use of wood stoves in order to control the problem," he said.

Several municipalities have now taken matters into their own hands, and are trying to enforce regulation.

The licensing law was voted on about two weeks ago and will become effective on Oct. 1 of this year.

DiNardi expressed mixed feelings about the Amherst ordinance, and questioned how the regulations would be enforced.

"You can get a driver's license by answering the right questions, but look at how many people drink and drive," he said.

Custodian Larry Center

He's the Center in Campus Center

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

He can usually can be found in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center, pushing a portable trash bin on wheels and identified by his thick, gray beard, a worn-blue baseball cap, and a heavy Southern accent.

His name is Larry Center and he has been a custodian in the Campus Center for five years. Students who frequently study or relax there can appreciate Larry, who flips paper ashtrays onto tables with precision in front of the chairs where students rest between classes. All the while, Larry scoops up litter off the floors, dispenses it into his bin, and offers a nod or friendly smile to those who know him—which amounts to hundreds of Campus Center travelers.

"My job is to keep the place clean," he said. Center said he sweeps, cleans, and polishes the Campus Center, from the third floor to the coffee shops and the three restrooms.

"I like my job and I like the kids (students)," Center said. "It's interesting and I meet a lot of people."

Center first came to work at UMass as a custodian in the summer of 1980 because "I knew a guy who worked here," he said.

He also worked as a dishwasher at the Lord Jeffery Amherst Inn from October until the inn was closed following a work-stoppage caused by stalled talks between union and inn officials. "I don't want no more to do with it," he said of dishwashing.

Center has lived in this area since October 1979. He has lived in Greenfield, Lake Pleasant, and currently resides in Leverett in a three-room trailer.

"I'm still paying on the trailer, and it's on a piece of land my brother-in-law owns," he said. "Moving around from place to place was too expensive, so we bought the trailer."

Center was born in Jackson, Kentucky, where his father worked for 18 years in coal mines. Center said he has moved from place to place and once lived in Florida for seven years. "I've lived in Ohio; I've been everywhere."

He said he met his wife Dorothy in 1962 while in Kentucky, and they have five children, four granddaughters and one grandson.

Center admitted he has had a few bad days.

Trip to South Africa questioned

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor who says some of his books have been banned in South Africa has decided to travel to that country this May, despite some students' concern that he is breaking a boycott of the apartheid government.

Robert P. Wolff, a UMass philosophy professor who is the author of In Defense of Anarchism and Understanding Marx, as well as many other books, said he had been asked to visit by a friend who is an anti-apartheid professor at one of the two integrated universities in South Africa.

He said he felt that if he was granted a visa he would go to lecture in political philosophy and to support his friend, whose house has been bombed because of her anti-apartheid activities.

Graduate students in philosophy and students in the Social Thought and Political Economy program, which Wolff founded, are concerned that a representative of the University will be breaking the boycott called by the African National Congress. The ANC is the outlawed black revolutionary organization whose celebrated leader, Nelson Mandela, has been imprisoned for over 20 years.

The African National Congress called a boycott of the South African government in the 1950s because of its apartheid policies, in which the white minority rules over a voteless black majority.

Solly Simelane, at the ANC headquarters in New York, said it was important to honor the boycott because visits to South Africa will be used by Pretoria to legitimize the apartheid regime.

"The political domination is continuous and being compounded...if he is a radical he must join the voices who are saying do not go there," Simelane said.

The University of the Witwatersrand, where Wolff will be lecturing, is known as an integrated, progressive university, but Simelane said there can be no true integration until apartheid is dismantled.

Wolff said his friend asked him to come to expose her students to left-wing political theory because "it is something that they don't ever get there."

Wolff said he disagreed with those who insist on a boycott, not on principles but on tactics. "One of the things I hoped to do is establish contact between us and them."

Commenting that "nothing that any of us does will have more than a marginal impact," Wolff said he thought first-hand reports on the situation in South Africa will be more valuable than if he participated in the boycott. He also said he felt that he would be letting down "a personal friend of mine" if he did not go.

Johan Buys, a clerk in the visa department of the South African Embassy in Washington, said that if Wolff's books were banned in South Africa, his visa would probably be denied at the embassy level. But it is "more than likely" that it would be granted when they referred it to Pretoria, Buys said in a telephone interview.

Social thought and political economy major Chris Williamson, who is also a member of the five-college African students organization, said he disapproved of Wolff's plans. "I think it's criminal to be associated with a blood-ridden regime like that...it shows a contradiction with his so-called Marxism."

Philosophy graduate student Cindy Kaufman said some graduate students are opposed to the trip. "I think that the strategy of isolating South Africa culturally, politically and academically has had a good effect, and we should continue it," Kaufman said.

Even if he succeeds at politicizing some students at the university, she said, "you have to look at the broader context."

Pointing out that the African National Congress is widely considered to be the most legitimate representative of the struggle in South Africa, Kaufman said, "we ought to respect their strategy."

Trips by UMass professors to South Africa have only raised controversy in the past when University funds were

The biography as history

Professor Stephen B. Oates bucks textbook conventions

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

To many, history books are impersonal, academic accounts of past eras that are probably only enjoyed by professors and historians.

Not necessarily, says University of Massachusetts history professor Stephen B. Oates.

Oates has won acclaim for his biographies of key figures in American history, biographies that do not cater to the academic elite but rather to a broader audience. Over a period of 12 years, he has written profiles of Martin Luther King Jr., Abraham Lincoln, abolitionist John Brown and rebel slave Nat Turner.

This Civil War quartet, as he calls it, was popular among the general reading public as well as historians. In a recent interview, Oates said more Americans read biography than any other form, and he has tried to address this in his writing.

Oates emphasized that while he is a trained historian, his biographies are part of a literary genre. "In the best kind of biography, you sit down to tell a story of a life. This is where it's like fiction. It isn't fiction, because you can't invent anything, but you try to shape a life story so that it reads like a story. It's an art form. I write like a novelist.

"The best compliment I'm paid is when someone says, 'I read your biography of King and it read like a novel,' " he said.

Not only do his works read like novels, they are received like them as well. Let the Trumpet Sound: The Life of Martin Luther King, Jr., his profile of the slain civil rights leader, was chosen as a Literary Guild alternate selection and received a glowing review in the New York Times.

Oates, who in 1984 was named the Paul Murray Kendall Professor of Biography by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and Murray Schwartz, dean of the faculty of humanities and fine arts, teaches undergraduate courses in Civil War history and biographical history, as well as a graduate seminar on biography. He has been teaching at UMass since 1968.

He has a doctorate in history from the University of Texas at Austin, and has published 12 books and 70 newspaper and magazine articles. Oates' most recent book, Abraham Lincoln: The Man Behind the Myth, was published in 1984 by Harper and Row.

He says that biography is a popular style because it humanizes history. "It says that the individual does count, and that means a lot to us in a highly technical complicated age."

But Oates' approach to history is not universally respected by other academics. "There are a lot of my colleagues who I don't think really quite understand biography and are not sure whether it should be regarded as scholarship or not," he said.

He stressed however, that his work rests on exhaustive scholarship and research.

When he first became interested in history as a senior at the University of Texas in 1958, he said, it was a time when narrative and biographical history was still very prevalent. Authors such as Bruce Catton and Arthur Schlesinger Jr. were writing narrative history of the type that Oates himself would later write.

"The 1950s was just the tail end of the great age of the artful narrative historians. The age of the technicians, the statistical and social scientists, was just beginning. I walked that old traditional road while most of my peers went down a new one," Oates said.

Louis Greenbaum, also a history professor at UMass, agrees with Oates that his approach is no longer the most popular one. "Most of the historical writing is focused now on movements or periods, not individuals. There are some people who may not consider it [narrative history] a legitimate genre, but it is one of the oldest forms of historical writing," Greenbaum said.

Oates said "too many scholarly historians who focus on numbers and rely on an analytical, statistical approach and write for one another have become intolerant of my kind of history. My answer to that is: Beware of anybody who thinks they've got a corner on the only way to truth."

The next work he will publish is Biography As High Adventure: Life-Writers Speak on Their Art, a collection of essays he edited by nine biographers explaining how they have written their books and the challenges in writing in that style. Oates said the book will be released by the University of Massachusetts Press in a few months.

Also in progress is a biography of novelist William Faulkner. Oates said that this work is related to his Civil War quartet because Faulkner chronicled the same things that swept up Turner, Brown, Lincoln and King.

He said that the connection between King and Faulkner is that "they're both 20th-century figures, they're both Southerners, and they both were deeply involved in the massive convulsions the modern South has gone through." Oates said Faulkner unwillingly got swept up in the civil rights movement and was considered a radical in Mississippi.

Oates said that he is very happy teaching at UMass because it is "one of the centers for the writing and study of biography in the country." The UMass Press is publishing a biography series, which Oates and Paul Mariani of the English department are co-editing.

"But I find that as I get older," he said, "it is increasingly difficult to be a full-time writer and a full-time teacher, so there may come a time when I'll be forced to step down from my teaching. If not that, at least perhaps drop down to part-time teaching. I will hate that, I'll guarantee you, but I was a writer first. If you've ever had that life in you, there's no way you can put that on a back burner."

Professor Stephen B. Oates

FYI:

Sarah Weddington, the lawyer who won the landmark abortion case Roe v. Wade, will speak at 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Weddington, the first woman elected to the Texas House of Representatives, will speak on "The International Women's Network."

She served as former President Carter's advisor on women's issues and general counsel of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The lecture is free and open to the public.

A panel discussion on "Peace Movements in Europe, East and West," will be held at 8 p.m. tonight at the Converse Hall Assembly Room of Amherst College. Differences and similarities between peace movements in Eastern and Western Europe will be discussed by, among others, Jan Kavan, Czech human rights activist, and Dan Smith of Britain's Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament.

Harassment not the official policy

In last Friday's Collegian, an article quoted Tom Butler, space coordinator of the BOG, as saying, "People in the Republican Club have made comments and statements personally attacking MassPIRG." Any individuals responsible for such actions did so as individuals and not as representative members of the Republican Club. MassPIRG provides necessary information to the public on toxic waste. I commend their efforts in this area of public service.

Gilbert Stair, president UMass Republican Club

Education before publication

I tend to look forward to reading Rusty Denton's Collegian columns. I need the laugh. I doubt very much if I'm alone in this view—it must be obvious to others also that Denton publishes first and asks questions later. His column on Feb. 25, "Escape changes nothing," was typical Dentonesque journalism—admitting to know little about a subject, but writing on it anyways.

Denton desperately tries to make a case against divestment in businesses operating in South Africa on the grounds that there will either be someone willing to fill the resultant economic vacuum, or that the failing economy will incite jobless blacks to mount a bloody revolution. These grim options provide a clear example of Denton's failure to grasp simple facts; divestment isn't necessarily an attempt to bankrupt a nation, it's an effort to force a government to revise its system of governing. Denton evidently misses the point that companies continuing to do business in South Africa are subjecting themselves to what amounts to a PR person's worst nightmare. Hopefully the profit and loss charts of these companies will eventually cause many of them to realize that if they wish to continue operating in the lucrative economic climate of South Africa, then they're going to have to use their tremendous economic leverage to aid the government in changing its policies.

I enjoyed reading Denton's comparison of Martin Luther King's policies of nonviolence and current policies of divestment. In the world according to Denton, divestment leads to bloody revolt, whereas nonviolence leads to the peaceful integration of differing ideas and ideals. I hate to disrupt Denton's logic, but divestment is a form of non-violent protest. Divestment is virtually the same thing as boycotting (a form of protest put to use by the same King you mention), both policies attack a problem at its economic roots. And in a capitalistic society, there is no better form of non-violent attack.

I also liked the portrayal of peaceful integration arriving over time to that nice Mississippi community. It's good to know that dreams do sometimes come true, although it would've helped if the article made some mention of who the peaceful pastor was, or what the community was called. Citing traceable sources does much to aid one's credibility.

But enough of this. I support the policies of divestment directed against apartheid, but there's no reason for the arguments against divestment to continue in the pathetic vein of "Escape changes nothing." If Denton and others wish to pursue this stand, perhaps they could go over to Goodell Library, walk up to the sixth floor mezzanine and read some of the books on South Africa located there, such as Power is Ours by Gatsha Buthelezi (Buthelizi too is against divestment). Enlighten yourselves on the subject and not only is it possible that the content of Denton's articles will improve, but I may just learn something while I'm laughing.

Fiscal questions

Today at 6 p.m., the Student Government Association Budgets Committee will hold a public forum to answer questions and defend its proposed student activities budget for fiscal 1987. The meeting is in Campus Center room 803, and we urge every student concerned about where our money goes—or doesn't go—to attend.

Many student senators lauded the document when it was presented to them last week. Committee chairman Jordan Rosner expressed confidence that it will not be "amended at all." The odds support this. It appears the SGA will acquiesce to the University administration's demand that the senate pass the budget by this Wednesday, probably too soon for an alternative proposal or viable amendments to be assembled.

At a time when student leaders and UMass officials are negotiating to determine which side should control student funds, this would be an odd way to demonstrate student fiscal responsibility—rushing through the process without fighting the decree from Vice-Chancellor Dennis Madson and student activities director Randy Donant that they will not accept a student-made budget after March 5.

More important, this leaves insufficient time for close scrutiny of the Budgets Committee's actions and motives. Facing an estimated $120,000 deficit, the committee took a chainsaw to certain items in the budget. Among the areas of concern:

- All groups the committee deemed "political" have had their funding proposed as zero. This includes the Peacemakers, Republican Club, Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee, Lesbian Union, and Radical Student Union. This would effectively shut down most of these groups, stifling the vigorous political debate that is a hallmark of the campus.
- Also zero-funded are three minority student associations and Drum, a 17-year-old annual magazine focusing on Third World issues that has won national awards for its fine graphics and literary content and gained recognition not only on campus but in prisons and as far away as Africa. The committee says Drum should be ineligible for SGA money because the students who produce it have faculty guidance. But members of any student organization, SGA-funded or not, are free to approach professors for advice or academic credits.

It is noteworthy that of the 10 Budgets Committee members, five are on the staff of The Minuteman, the right-wing monthly that began publication last month with financial help from national conservative groups. Rosner adamantly denies the committee seeks to cripple progressive forces at UMass. But the fact remains that on campuses nationwide, right-wingers are the ones who have access to ample corporate support. Whatever the UMass Republicans say, their club is the only zero-funded group that stands any chance of getting adequate outside funding.

These factors should be considered when the committee faces the public tonight. Even if the SGA scrambles and meets the Whitmore-imposed deadline, the questions will remain.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

U.S. role in Philippines

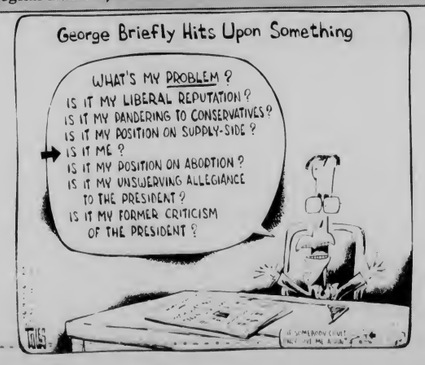
Timothy Harris

Supporting right-wing dictatorships can sure be embarassing. And it's not like the United States and the Philippines don't go way back either. We've been helping those people out since 1898, when, after winning the Spanish-American War in fine style, we bought their little country along with Guam and Puerto Rico for $20 million.

President McKinley, a Christian, like Reagan, told of his decision to help the inhabitants of the island. "There was nothing left to do but to take them all and to educate the Filipinos, and uplift and civilize and Christianize them, and do the very best we could by them, as our fellow men for whom Christ also died."

It took the next three years and 70,000 troops to effect this "Christianization," and no one will ever know how many thousands of Filipinos died as the blessings of Western Civilization were being conferred. One volunteer from Washington State did however note "...this shooting human beings sure beats rabbit hunting all to pieces."

The shooting is still going on. Dissenters to the U.S. Marcos dictatorship have been executed regularly - and only very recently has Reagan made any move at all to disassociate himself from the regime. Until last week, Reagan's attitude toward Marcos mirrored that of Roosevelt's to Somoza. "He may be a son of a bitch but he's our son of a bitch."



To matter who is in office, the Philippines will remain a U.S. client state with bone-crushing poverty juxtaposed to breath-taking wealth. The liberal Aquino, while no doubt a better choice than Marcos, is in no position to redistribute the country's wealth.

This is true for two reasons. The first is that the Philippine military has somewhat of a mind of its own. It will be no more motivated to largess under Aquino than it was under Marcos. The second reason is that, according to Raymond Bonner, writing in the Feb. 9 New York Times, guns are pouring into the Philippines to arm private security forces. Rich people's houses in that country have always come with high walls, and there will now be armies behind them. These people have no intention of giving anything away.

All honest observers admit that the Philippines have reached a crisis point that is nothing short of revolutionary. The New People's Army is the only hope for the disenfranchised of those islands. Even the New York Times admits that at least 5 million Filipinos support the NPA, and that support for them continually grows.

So the question becomes, why is the United States playing such a condescending and paternalistic role in that nation's affairs? If the people of the Philippines want their country back, as only a New People's Army would guarantee, shouldn't they get it?

In defense of budget allotments

It was with a great deal of outrage that I read the statements of Alex Guest, Jenifer Brower, and others concerning the SGA budget act in Friday's issue of the Collegian. Since last November, the budget committee has put in many long, arduous hours working on each RSO's budget proposal. In many cases, working on the actual draft of the individual RSO budget proposals, all the way through the various reviews and hearings to the final budget act itself, the committee has given almost every night of the last several months to the compilation of this budget act. For someone to come along and say that this budget act is "grossly irresponsible" or that we are "self-righteous individuals" (who) all of a sudden say we're not going to give money to these groups is in itself "grossly irresponsible."

In fact, for Jenifer Brower in particular who claims that we all of a sudden decided on our actions, I have this to say: where were you when we received the budget of the LU? We scheduled a hearing with your organization, received confirmation, and no one even showed up. Further, as a group you were not even able to produce the minimum 10 active members that every RSO must have to be recognized by the SGA. Whose fault is this?

For too many years now, people have seen the money allocated to the various RSO's from the Student Activities Trust Fund as a right rather than a privilege that it is. This year in particular, with the need being greater than ever and the amount of allocable funds being less than ever, I believe we did an admirable job of distributing the SATF. We not only funded a fourth lawyer and kept alive the bulk of the various RSO's, but we are also taking care of the deficit that the SGA has been caring for for a few years now by making responsible payments toward its final repayment. If this budget act is given to the administration by March 5 (the date agreed upon), we will have the greatest opportunity of its acceptance, and the best chance of retaining control of our student funds. Let's cut out this petty bickering by a few selected individuals and work toward the good of the entire student body. If you have problems with the proposed budget, it's still not too late. Attend the public hearing from 6 to 8 p.m. tonight, or attend the ratification meeting by the Student Senate Wednesday night.

However, remember that it's easy to work toward one's own priorities and a little more difficult to work toward the common good.

Guarneri String Quartet mesmerizes crowd
Pieces played flawlessly

By MIKE GERVASI
Collegian Correspondent

The Guarneri String Quartet reached a rolling boil Friday night as it mesmerized a sold out Bowker Auditorium; the intensity with which they played was surpassed only by their control of it.

The quartet consists of violinists Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violist Michael Tree, and cellist David Soyer and is on the faculty of the Curtis Institute of Music as well as that of the University of Maryland. As a group, they have travelled the world and have won many awards such as the first ever New York City Seal of Recognition. They have also won awards for their recordings on the RCA Red Seal label, collaborating with Arthur Rubinstein and Pinchas Zukerman among others. They also each started their solo careers very young, debuting with such groups as the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The ensemble began the show with Mendelssohn's Quartet in E-flat Major, Op. 44, No. 3. They attacked the first movement immediately with an energy and fire that took me off-guard. I wasn't expecting the frontal assault that they leveled so quickly. They kept up this pace through the second movement, which called for equally aggressive play. The third movement was an adagio which was played with great tenderness and perfect ballance. Every slight change in one voice was felt by the others almost before it happened. The piece finished, as it had begun, with a movement that demanded strength and conviction. The whole piece was played as it was meant to be.

The second piece was Serenade for String Trio in D Major, Op. 8 by Ludwig Van. This was quite in contrast to the first piece—not as serious or intense. The piece is meant to be played delicately, but in a straight forward manner. The group played it perfectly; upon closing my eyes, I imagined a group of eighteenth century musicians at a garden party. The soft sounds bathed over the audience, who seemed to let out a collective sigh.

Their final piece was Dvorak's Quintet for Piano and Strings in A Major, Op. 81—very characteristic of his work. For this, Lydia Artyniw came out and played the piano. Her credentials are impressive as well. She debuted with the Philadelphia Orchestra when she was eight years old. She is also a world traveler and her debut recording was Gramophone Magazine Critic's Choice and Best of the Year disc.

For this last piece, the group again exhibited a powerful controlled intensity. The first movement was played warmly with quick changes in mood. There was great attention to detail and balance, the piano and strings complementing each other perfectly. The second movement was again moody, ending with a dark whisper that slowly ran out of breath. The last two movements, finishing the piece and the show, were played like a gypsy dancer on hot coals.

Overall, the group put together a show of technically difficult music which also called for the communication of some deep and varied emotions. The combination is very demanding, but they pulled it off flawlessly. Now, if only the violist and cellist would keep from wearing such bad ties.

Lydia Artiniu is just one of the acclaimed artists who comprise the Guarneri String Quartet.

Laurie Anderson fills Orpheum for a night of conceptual music

CONCERT REVIEW

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

With the aid of her electronic violins, visual screen, innovative dance and unpredictible style, Laurie Anderson entranced the packed Orpheum theater in Boston Friday on the opening night of a six city mini-tour.

The screen, one of her many influential props, constantly geared the off-beat images it projected to her music. From innocent sheep to a mysterious dancing shirt (with no person in it), the audience didn't know what to expect. Anderson herself made an appearance in one of the films, repeating a dance routine she had just performed live.

However, the screen was only a piece of the show. Anderson's was backed keyboardist Dave Labolt and vocalists Bennie Diggs and Phillip Ballou.

Labolt had his moment in the spotlight. His keyboard solo involved a gimmick which fit in well with the conceptual effects of the concert. The instrument turned out to be his tie, which had appeared to be a perfectly ordinary tie.

Special effects aside, Anderson's humorous anecdotes could stand alone. Her story about sex and sperm is just one example: "They have no eyes, no ears, yet some of them already know they'll be bald. If sperm were the size of a salmon, it would be traveling at 500 miles an hour."

Anderson's talent of verbalizing imagination is key to her performance. "Yesterday I got a motercycle, not for the speed, but for the helmet." Who else would say such a thing?

She started the two hour concert off with her own version of Hansel and Gretel. This branched into some of her older songs such as Sweaters, Kokoku, Closed Circuits and even a stacatto version of Take Me Out To The Ballgame.

She also sang some new material from her upcoming movie entitled Home of the Brave. During one of the songs, Devil's gonna get ya, she danced through the audience distributing AA batteries to the audience.

After a standing ovation, she returned to the stage to perform Oh Superman as an encore. Then, to further elude the sterotypes which many concerts fall into, the unpredictable screen showed credits, although it didn't say whether or not Anderson's white satin suit and red shoes were furnished by Fortune 500.

One of the best parts was when Anderson picked up a neon-lit rod, resembling the lightsaber Luke Skywalker had in Star Wars. If "The Force" has ever been with anyone besides Luke, it was with Laurie Anderson Friday night.

Laurie Anderson performed two sold out shows Friday night at at Boston's Orpheum Theatre.

As a Marine Officer, you could be in charge of a Mach 2 + F/A-18A, a vertical take-off Harrier or one of our other jets or helicopters. And you could do it by the time you're 23. But it takes a special commitment on your part. We demand leaders at all levels. We teach you to be one. If you're a freshman, sophomore, or junior, ask about our Platoon Leaders Class undergraduate officer commissioning programs. If you're a senior, check out our Officer Candidate Class graduate programs. Starting salaries are from $17,000 to $23,000. And you can count on going farther . . . faster.
Go farther... faster.
We're looking for a few good men.

One man show portrays King

By A.V. THOMPSON
Collegian Correspondent

With wonderful characters and astonishing energy, Al Eaton provided a marvelous one man show in The Life and Times of Martin Luther King.

Eaton hypnotized the audience with protrayals of a range of characters that presented the different ideals of the Civil Rights Movement of the 60's. Most importantly he recreated some of the most famous speeches of King.

With a collage of Loretta King, newspaper headlines, marchers and their banners as a backdrop, Eaton needed only a desk, a chair and a podium as his props.

From Nathan, the college student from suburbia, to a militant Black Panther member, Eaton changed roles with the ease of taking off his glasses. One minute he was a grandfather from Montgomery, Alabama narrating the story of the Montgomery Bus Boycott, and the next he was an Uncle Tom character who scratched his head, shuffled his feet and wanted to do nothing but, "Keep choppin' Boss's tobacco like I s'posed to be doin'."

Eaton wooed the audience's participation to the point of clapping at his own performances. Soon the audience clapped, hummed, sang and finally gave Eaton a standing ovation unaided. Their enthusiasm certainly made up for any empty seats.

Eaton, a 29-year-old Bostonian, shifted the atmosphere from one of laughter to speeches that held poignant messages. Eaton's own political views spilled out when showing the transformation of the Black Panther member.

The character who said, "I want to kill me, burn me, some honkies when the Revolution comes," seeking violence in retribution for his pains, soon realised the need for a central moral leader to look up to. He now saw Martin Luther King as his hero, "Armed not with guns but with demands."

Eaton has a remarkable facial resemblence to King and as he uttered the famous speeches people in the audience whispered, "Amen, Amen." The mood, already set with gospel music played before and during the performance, erupted when Eaton sang a Cappella at the end of the show. The audience swayed and hummed in time to the music and only refrained from singing because they did not know the words. A lady behind chanted, "Sing your song."

The one man show was the climax of the celebration of Black History Month. Eaton said, "The show was eight weeks in New York and had great reviews in the New York Times." It has also been on Boston channel WNEV Channel Seven.

Quinonez hurts shoulder

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)—Rookie shortstop Rey Quinonez suffered a bruised right shoulder when hit by a batted ball yesterday, becoming the first casualty in the Boston Red Sox's training camp.

Trainer Charlie Moss applied ice packs to Quinonez's shoulder and said the young prospect probably will not miss any time.

"Quinonez was out in short center field and wasn't looking," Manager John McNamara said. "It was a freak thing because the young man is a very smooth fielder."

McNamara divided the training roster for the second full-squad workout as chilling northerly winds subsided and a warm sun sent the temperature into the 50s. One-half of the team worked on the main diamond at Chain O'Lakes Park, the other on a field across the street in the minor league complex.

McNamara announced that veteran left-hander Bruce Hurst will start in Boston's exhibition opener against the Detroit Tigers next Friday in Lakeland. Right-hander Al Nipper will start against the Tigers in a return meeting Saturday in Winter Haven.

General Manager Lou Gorman reported that rookie outfielder Dana Williams had agreed to a one-year contract. That left rookie outfielder Mike Greenwell as the Red Sox's only unsigned player. Greenwell is in camp and working out.

In other Sox news, southpaw Joe Sambito, once a flame-throwing relief ace, is hopeful for a reunion with long lost relatives in a comeback bid with the Boston Red Sox.

Sambito figures he can help the Red Sox in two ways: on the field and at the gate. But first he has to prove he can still pitch in the major leagues.

"If I can win a job, I know I'll be able to help the club win some ball games," he said during a break in training camp.

"And if I do that, I'll see cousins and other relatives I haven't seen in years."

Sambito is a native of Brooklyn. However, he explained, his father grew up in Massachusetts and he now has relatives in "Waltham, Bedford, Leominster, Fitchburg, Ayer and Humarock (a section of Plymouth), and maybe a few other towns I don't recall immediately."

"I told Sully (Red Sox coowner Haywood Sullivan) that if I make the team, the Red Sox's home attendance might increase by 500,000," he added with a smile.

Because the teams split during the regular season, a coin flip was needed to determine the seventh seed and the winner of the quarterfinal berth. The Minutewomen won and avoided a Wednesday game against last-place Duquesne for the right to face undefeated Rutgers on Thursday.

The entire tourney will take place at West Virginia starting with the Duquesne-George Washington game on Wednesday at 3 p.m.

Thursday's quarterfinal action will see St. Joseph's (third at 12-4) face sixth-place Rhode Island (5-11) at 1 p.m.

UMass will play Penn State (second place at 12-4 and 20-7 overall) at 3 p.m. Host West Virginia (fourth at 8-8) will then play fifth-place Temple (8-8) at 6:30 with eighth-ranked Rutgers (16-0 and 25-2) taking on the GW-Duquesne survivor at 8:30.

UMass had mixed success against Penn State this season. The Minutewomen were stomped by the Lady Lions at Penn State, but lost by only three at home on January 4.

Penn State, ranked 16th in the nation, is led by 6-2 junior foward Vicki Link and her 16 points-per-game. She also hauls down close to 10 rebounds-per-game. Sophomore point guard Suzie McConnell, a 5-3 dynamo, averages a league-leading 10.24 assists-per-game while contributing 12 ppg.

UMass 2nd in New England

Donovan breaks three records for UMass

By JOE ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD—The University of Massachusetts could not make up a a big Williams College lead on the final day of the New England Intercollegiate championship swim meet yesterday at Springfield College records.

During the last day of the meet, UMass placed first in two events and second in another as Donovan broke his own New England record in the 100 freestyle with a time of 45.30 for first place. He also broke records in the 500 and 200 freestyle on Friday and Saturday respectively.

Williams' 842 points easily pushed them into first. The Minutemen had 722 for second, Tufts University had 645 for third place while defending champion Southern Connecticut State University was fourth with 636. UMass was the top Division I school in the meet.

Junior John Turner, who has battled shoulder and back injuries all season, came through with a 1:56.74 in the 200 backstroke, also good enough for a first place for the Minutemen. UMass junior Mike Hoover's 2:12.72 placed him second in New England in the 200 breaststroke.

In the 1,650-yard freestyle, UMass junior Rick Bishop took fourth with a 16:45.22 while sophomore Jim Flannery was fifth, clocking a 16:51.83.

Williams, which has a wealth of experience in championship meets and has done well in past years, winning seven of the last eight NE meets, won the meet with their depth. Ephmen swimmer William Couch was named most valuable player of the meet.

In action on Friday night, Donovan set the New England record in the 500 freestyle, easily winning with a 4:28.50. He led Springfield College's Larry Jordan by a length after 50 yards and eventually won by three lengths over Rich Enders of Southern Connecticut who was a distant second at 4:39.31.

The 200 individual medley went to Jordan with a 1:54.53. The 50 freestyle went to Jim Wong of Tufts with a 21.50, however Donovan, the best sprinter in New England, didn't enter the event in favor of others.

The one-meter diving was won by Chris Keefe of Southern Connecticut with a 482.05. The 400 medley relay went to Southern Connecticut as well, in 3:34.64. After Friday, Williams was ahead with 217 points to UMass' 185. The second day saw a host of events go off with Donovan breaking another record for the Minutemen.

The senior freestyler set the New England mark in the 200 freestyle, blazing to a 1:38.78. Enders was in second again, turning in a 1:42.56. In the 400 individual medley, Williams went 1-2, hurting UMass.

Other results: The 100 breaststroke saw UMass' Mike Hoover take third with a 1:00.66. The 800 freestyle relay had the Minutemen in fifth place with a 7:09.89 while senior Marc Surette was sixth in the 100 backstroke with a 56.29.

After Saturday, Williams opened their lead, having a 93-point advantage over UMass at 545-452. Southern Connecticut was third with 407 while Tufts awaited the final day with 390 points.

Editors Note: Due to the lateness of the meet last night, all of UMass' results could not be reported. For a complete report on the meet, see tomorrow's Collegian sports section.

Sutton and Brown win conference honors

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton and freshman foward David Brown were honored by the Atlantic 10 media Friday, being named to the all-conference and all-rookie teams respectively.

Sutton, the 6-2 off-guard that led UMass with 18.4 points-per-game this season, was named second team all-conference.

Brown, a fine rookie that scored 9.2 ppg and grabbed 5.5 rebounds per game, was named to the all-rookie team, the fifth UMass player to be named to that team over the past six seasons.

The Atlantic 10 player of the year was St. Joseph's swingman Maurice Martin. Hawk coach Jim Boyle was the A-10's coach of the year.

Joining Martin on the first team were West Virginia guard Dale Blaney, Duquesne guard Rick Suder, St. Bonaventure foward Barry Mungar and St. Joseph's center Rodney Blake. Outside of Blake, a sophomore, all are seniors.

The second team consisted of Sutton, Temple guard Ed Coe, West Virginia guard Holman Harley, Temple center Tim Perry and Duquesne foward Dwayne Rawls.

The freshman of the year award was split by Rhode Island's John Evans and West Virginia's Darryl Prue. However, Brown scored more points-per-game then Prue and started more game as well as scored more points then Evans.

In the league playoffs at the Meadowlands over the weekend, West Virginia and St. Joseph's advanced to the finals, scheduled for 9 p.m. Monday night (televised on ESPN).

On Saturday night, West Virginia got 18 points from Blaney to defeat Temple, 61-56 and advance to the finals. The Owls, at 24-4 overall, now join the host of teams on the borderline of making the NCAA tournament. Those bids will be released this coming weekend.

St. Joseph's, at 23-5, was supposed to have little trouble with 14-14 Duquesne, but it took a controversial foul shot by Wayne Williams with no time left on the clock to eliminate the Dukes, 60-59.

St. Joe's lost to West Virginia twice this season, 66-62 at home and 81-72 at WVU. The winning team will receive an automatic bid into the NCAA's with West Virginia, at 22-9, needing the victory more then the Hawks to insure their place in the tourney.

A-10 Notebook: Rhode Island, with their first-round loss on Thursday night at home against Penn State, became the first of 287 NCAA Division I teams to have their season ended. . .UMass became the second, losing to Rutgers about 15 minutes later.

Women win flip, face Lions

By PETER ABRAHAM

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team extended their regular winning season winning streak to three, two games and one coin flip.

The Minutewomen, by virtue of a coin flip held yesterday afternoon, finished in seventh place in the Atlantic 10 conference and will open the post-season league tournament on Thursday afternoon in the quarterfinals instead of Wednesday afternoon in the first round.

UMass and George Washington both finished at 4-12 in the league after GW lost to nationally-ranked Penn State on Saturday in College Park.

Gymnasts victorious in weekend road meets

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's gymnastics teams returned from their respective road trips yesterday with the men splitting their dual meet at Army, and the women ousting Rutgers in New Jersey.

In the men's meet against Army and Lowell at West Point, the Cadets dominated the meet and won it with a score of 261.20, beating the UMass score of 247.35. Lowell was a weak third, tallying a 167.75.

The Minutemen (8-6) were at the unyielding hands of an extremely potent Cadet team that took five out of the six events, finishing in the first three slots in all five events they won. Only on the vault did UMass take a first place when captain Eric Ciccone scored a 9.15 to win the event, with fellow Minuteman Phil Gorgone taking second with a 9.10.

The all-around competition was won by Army's Jeff Baum with a total of 52.75 followed by Cadet January Robinson with a 51.50. Minuteman Roberto Weil took the third position with a consistant 50.60.

The Minutemen will now begin training for the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Champoinships held at West Point next weekend.

The Minutewomen continued their strong late-season surge this weekend, pouncing on Rutgers by a score of 165.85-148.70.

UMass (4-6) dominated the meet from start to finish, winning all four events. Although the women had another poor effort on the beam, they more than made up for it with a strong finish on the floor exercise. That event was highlighted by tri Captain Chris Cloutier's high score of 9.0 finishing her set with a perfect double back flip half twist reverse tuck, one of the more difficult maneuvers on the floor.

Three poor efforts on the beam in the past three meets by the women is beginning to annoy UMass coach Chuck Schiebler. "We had a good chance to add to our total which would help us in our placement for the tournament, but the beam once again hindered our final tally."

The tournament in which Schiebler is talking about is the East Coast Athletic Conference Championships held at New Hampshire on March 15th. Each team's final score for each event during the season are added up and the teams are placed in seeded positions. The Minutewomen are currently seeded in third place behind University of New Hampshire and Yale.

The Minutewomen will take on UNH this weekend at Boyden.

'87 BUDGET WAITS FOR APPROVAL

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

This Wednesday the UMass Undergraduate Student Senate will vote on the proposed budget for fiscal year 1987 (FY '87) for Registered Student Organization (RSO) funding, released on Feb. 26 by the budget hearing committee.

Aside from SGA offices and agencies, there was $84,243.73 for RSO allocations. Most organizations received cuts in funding. Many small, special interest groups whose funding had generally been under a thousand dollars received no funding. Exceptions to this was the African Students Association (ASA), which received $1,732.00 last year, the Chamber Choir, which received $1,081.00 last year, and DRUM magazine, which received $16, 389.00 for FY '86, all of which received no funding for FY '87.

The Chamber Choir applied for funding late and did not follow up by filing a late funding application form, said Rosner. "The African Students Association was a real problem," he continued. The ASA had received funding last year, but now over half of their members are graduate students. After discussion with Sherwood Thompson, of the Office of Third World Affairs (OTWA), and investigation into their RSO status, the possibility of other funding, and the legality of the Undergraduate Senate funding it, the hearing committee decided that ASA ought to be funded by the Graduate Student Senate; since "the majority of their members are graduate students," said Rosner. He felt that ASA would have no problem getting funding from the Graduate Student Senate.

Rosner said that the committee learned this year that DRUM magazine was a class, and they had been turning away other groups requesting funding for years because they were associated with a department or were a class. Also, DRUM did not go to their budget hearing and Bob Genoa, Business Manager of the Student Activities Office (SAO) had allowed the yearly magazine to carry their '85 monies over into their '86 budget. According to Rosner, since the 1984 edition of DRUM was their last to be printed as of yet, that leaves them enough money to print for two more years.

Director of DRUM magazine, Professor Nelson Stevens could not be reached for comment, but some of his colleagues say that he, along with many RSO groups will be making their dissatisfaction known and hopefully getting redress this week -before, during and if necessary, after Wednesday's senate meeting.

Fourteen RSO's received increases, along with four groups that received funding for the first time. Among the fourteen was the Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP), with a .07 per cent increase, the Asian American Students Association, with a .004 per cent increase, and OTWA, with an increase of .04 per cent. WMUA radio station, Spectrum magazine, the Off-Campus Housing Office, the Boltwood Project and SCERA, along with some of the SGA functional organizations also received increases.

The Armenian Club, Abilities Unlimited, a handicapped students organization, the Lesbian Bisexual Counselling Collective, a phone line for students who may be having problems with their sexuality, and the UMass Amateur Radio, were the four receiving funding for the first time.

Rosner said that the budget hearing committee's criteria for priority funding revolved around several concerns. They wanted to fund those who they felt had no alternative sources of funding and then those who would have the most difficult time getting outside funding. He said that groups expanding the University community's cultural awareness and knowledge were given high priority, particularly in proportion to how much cultural programming they did, i.e., speakers, plays, cultural events. The committee also wanted to see that new groups had their operating expenses covered.

Rosner called OTWA "the nerve center for the Third World community" and said that the radio stations directly affect all students. He said that there is a large handicapped population on campus and that the Appeal Stays Sentence:It's Not Over Yet

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

Speaker of the UMass senate, John R. Ruddock, was sentenced on Wednesday, Feb. 26, after a guilty verdict of a "wanton destruction of personal property exceeding $100" charge at a student protest last fall against University stock investment in South Africa. According to Ruddock, he was acting as a neutral observer.

The court fined Ruddock a total of $65, which was appealed on Friday staying the sentence for a year. Ruddock's legal defense is optimistic about winning the appeal. They feel there are substantial issues in the case meriting a change in verdict.

UMass police officer, Dennis Bromery, son of the former UMass Chancellor Randolph Bromery, filed a felony charge against Ruddock for "malicious destruction of personal property." Judge Irving Goldblatt ruled insufficient evidence on the felony charge, which was then reduced to "wanton destruction of personal property exceeding $100" - a misdemeanor.

Bromery, who was not present during the incident, alleged over $270 worth of damage to his car, while Ruddock maintains that he did no damage to the car. The three UMass police officers who testified against Ruddock were also defendents in the Yvette Henry law suit. Ruddock's prosecution also had a mechanic testify giving a cost estimate of damages for the alleged dents and scratch.

Former UMass student, Lynn Rooney, witnessed the incident and testified for Ruddock. UMass activities coordinator, Delphine Quarles, of the Student Activities Office, Rick Townes, a UMass Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black and Minority Students (CCEBMS) advisor, and Danni Burgess, president of the UMass Undergraduate Student Government Association (SGA), testified as character witnesses for Ruddock during the Feb. 10 trial.

Ruddock said that he went to the protest to see that "students' rights were protected - by letting the University and police know that they would be held accountable for violations of students' rights, and also to inform students specifically of what their rights were under the circumstances." According to Ruddock, there had been reports of police misconduct in the past.

Thirty-three students weere arrested, handcuffed and placed in a bus. Ruddock alleges that as the bus started to leave, he noticed a gasoline leak - "gushing at times," he said. He ran to inform the director of public safety, Gerald O'Neil, but could not get around all the cars in lot, says Ruddock. He then placed his hand on the lower right hood section of a car and vaulted over it to the other side of the pavement. Ruddock continued, "I told the director of public safety, the bus was brought back and the students were unloaded."

It was a week later after 7:00 p.m. while convening a UMass senate meeting, that Ruddock was called off the podium by police and arrested.

Ruddock says that he has a lot of questions concerning the incident and the trial. He asked, "Would people consider a trial racist in which everyone who testified against me was white, except the man who filed charges - Bromery? And in which the only people

Stop Hiding Yourself : Be Proud

Editorial

by Giselle Andrade
Nummo Staff

What does it mean to be Black? Unfortunately for many Blacks, they don't know the answer. They believe that being Black is merely a matter of skin color. I once believed that every person knew that all Black people originate from Africa, but I was wrong.

I have, to my dismay, much too often, began talking and then arguing with a Black person who vigorously asserted that they are not Black, with the logic, "My roots trace back to the West Indies," or "My family were never slaves," or "My family doesn't originate from Africa."

As I shake my head wondering why I attempt to combat such ignorance, I continue nonetheless. I argue that the world is divided into three categories: Mongoloid, Caucasian, and Negroid (Black). Some of our own race believe that Blacks were always in the West Indies or Europe, or various other regions of the world. They refuse to accept the fact that at one time or another they were brought there and the majority of them were slaves.

One should not be ashamed to say, "Yes I am Black, and my ancestors were slaves." One should be proud; proud because you are not a slave - because your ancestors fought hard so that their children would taste freedom; proud because you are living as a real human being - finally holding all the rights you were entitled to at birth, but not given; proud because you are living the dream of your ancestors and can hold your head high.

Denying your heritage also means denying your race. Instead of working together and excelling, wasted time and enery is spent disassociating oneself from one's own kind. It is because so much negative stereotyping has been imposed on Blacks that some are ashamed to be Black.

Much to white surprise, not evey Black person is a watermelon-dripping, rowdy, ignorant, uneducated Uncle Tom. Black people come in all shapes, sizes, features and colors: everything from amber and cinnamon to charcoal and coffee brown. Every Black person does not have short, coarse hair. We have everything from long fine hair to short fine hair, to coarse long hair to short coarse hair, and everything in between, in a variety of colors. We are a very diverse race and shouldn't be stereotyped, especially not by our own people.

The stereotypes for Blacks are indeed the worst. Many of us do in actuality have white blood or other types of blood in us. Often it was due to rape. Are we really going to deny the Black in us and try to associate with the pint of white blood that resulted from an act of violence? How can anyone be proud of that?!

Too often I get skeptical remarks about what I am. When people ask me where I was born and I truthfully reply, "Senegal," the reaction is so often one of awed ignorance: "Well, you don't look African." When I ask what an African looks like the reply is usually, "I don't know, but not like you." If one is not sure what an African looks like, how can one begin to stereotype them.

People too often consume and project images without measuring them for accuracy or reality. How can there be a typical continent-wide look, when there is such diversity of features in individual families, never mind in various climates and countries.

I am proud to say that I am African, and everyone should be proud of their ancestry too. If we aren't proud of who we are, who will be? If we don't respect and love ourselves, who will? Surely not other people. We have been oppressed too long to turn around and oppress ourselves by rejecting our own race and heritage. We have to claim ourselves if we are to claim our future. The hand that holds you down should not be your own.

Pretending you're not Black is not going to move you up a notch. But it will remove the ladder when you fall. If you deny yourself, you will be denied. Of course we can also say that we are Americans. But we must not forget that we are African-Americans. We must never deny the African in us. In this country and world of diversity, that's what makes us so special. We have proven ourselves countless times far beyond the normal standards of excellence.

So the next time you look in the mirror and still say, "I'm not Black...," just remember: If you don't want us, we certainly don't want you.

Amherst's Own African Pottery

by Donette Wilson
Nummo Staff

During the month of February, Wheeler Art Gallery exhibited "primitive-fired" pottery with African influences created by Fall Art280 students.

Second-year graduate student, Tricia Ray, taught the class and said that her purpose was "to inspire her students to build coiled vessels for pit-firing as shown in slides of the Nigerian pottery process.

One student, Joe Stanley, an area artist, described the time he spent on his project, saying, "One night I spent hours alone in the studio until 2:00 a.m." Stanley said that he put on nice music and just went to work, accomplishing in one night what normally takes students three or four weeks to do.

The night that Stanley stayed in the studio, the janitor came in and offered "50.00 for his artwork, "to give his wife for a Christmas gift," said Stanley. The piece weighed about 24 lbs. and was unique because Stanley strategically molded handles connecting to the top of his pot making it possible to pour from both sides; and to carry in one hand while containing liquid.

In Northern Nigeria, training in pottery-making is based almost entirely on hands-on training. The potters learn by producing, "because it is in this way that real proficiency is acquired," said Ray. "Starting with good taste for utilitarian objects," Ray continued, the Abuja potters have the advantage over other African potters, of scientific knowledge available in testing clays and for providing glazes ready to use. Abuja potters are now able to build and buy kilns. They can also make and obtain potters' wheels, and explore locally any new raw material.

One of the best known potters in Nigeria is Ladi Kwale, who has superb skills as well as grace and sensitivity in her work. In 1962 she made a tour of England, demonstrating her art and has traveled to West Germany by invitation. In 1965 Kwale's large jar in traditional incised pattern received the Silver Award of Excellence in the 10th International Exhibition of Ceramic Art, held at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C.

The potter first prepares the clay simply by pounding the selected soil with water into a lump. The clay is then placed on a stand and the potter makes the base of the pot by hollowing out and "dragging up" the clay. Short thick coils are then used to mold the pot into the required shape. In some areas the potter is skilled enough to burn the pot in front of him/her with one hand, while molding and smoothing it with the other hand.

When the molding of the pot is complete, it is then left to dry in the sun and then stored, ready for firing. When a sufficient number of pots are ready for firing, they are stacked on top of a layer of brushwood and covered with grass, which is then set on fire.

Michael Cardew, Senior Pottery Officer of Nigeria, feels, "Art cannot be taught, it can only be evoked as a response to example. No amount of instruction in good design or even in sound technical principles will cause good pots to be made. The people could use modern pots and pans that are manufactured in mass quantities, and in recent years brought to Africa, but their joy in creativity for their own needs would have been killed. And their skills and traditional art would have been a cost."

BUDGETS

committee realized they needed things that weren't provided in the past. Three hundred dollars of their budget will pay for interpretations at meetings.

The Amateur Radio had had a budget two years ago, but did not submit a proposal last year. "This year they got it together and came back," said Rosner. Their functions include national disaster emergency information reception and transmission, and free world-wide, short-wave message service for students, which Rosner felt was important. He also felt that it was important to "adequately" fund Spectrum magazine, saying that "The University should have a lot of cultural arts unaffiliated with academics," and that "When we produce a student literary arts magazine, we should do it right." Last year Spectrum had to be produced only in black and white.

The committee deemed political organizations projecting specific viewpoints low funding priorities. Rosner said that it should be easy for them to get outside funding, particularly from outside groups whose viewpoints they support. He felt that the senate should not be funding political groups with a particular viewpoint since the senate is supposed to represent all students.

In regard to SGA organizations funding, Rosner said that they received minimum monies and are operating on a bare expense level. He said that the seriousness of the SGA groups funding will become even clearer when they examine past budgets and this year's budget recommendation for the ensuing pattern, its impact and possible effects.

Budget Process

If approved on Mar. 5, with little or no changes from the report, as is usually the case, the proposed budget will move on to Randy Donant, director of Student Activities, then on to Dennis Madson, vice-chancellor of Student Affairs, then to Chancellor Duffy, and finally to the trustees.

Once the senate passes the budget, RSO's can no longer lobby for increases or changes. But it is the trustee board, consisting of one UMass/Amherst student, Danni Burgess and one UMass/Boston student and ten state community members interested in higher education, who must ratify the budget to make it binding.

The year-long undergraduate budget process was condensed this yea in an attempt to put the undergradaute budget on the same time-line with the University and state budget procedures. This will give "students more effectiveness in their decisions," said Rosner.The undergraduate senate was often locked into a proposed budget format, unable to make changes because the budget sequence was not on schedule with the those of the University and state, explained Rosner. "We couldn't make decisions for buses and staff people funding in time for the University to act and for students to have legal recourse."The UMass budget time-line runs from Jan.- Dec., while the previous UMass undergraduate one ran from Sept.- May.

Feb. 19 ended the month-long budget hearing process. The budget hearings are designed to reconcile the financial needs of the RSO's with the undergraduate senate's capital. Each RSO had an approximately thirty minute session with the hearing committee to question, be questioned, answer and be answered concerning budget issues and practices. The goal of the hearings is to set financial priorities and organize RSO budgets in accordance with the actual monies available.

"To budget blindly is a waste of time," said Rosner. "We want to budget with knowledge." Rosner clarified his statement saying that if the budget committee had added up all the budget proposals, the sum would have equalled ten time the amount of actual monies. "Ninety per cent of the RSO budgets would have to be cut," said Rosner.

Rosner said that he felt the budget hearings went well overall, but that there were problems notifying some organizations. Each RSO was instructed to give the budget committee the name of three contact people and their phone numbers, and also the number of the organization's office, if they had one.

This year the budget hearing schedule was ready only four or five days ahead of the hearings, said Rosner, due to the attempt to align the budget process with the state budget process, therefore, hearing notifications had a much shorter time-span than in past years.

Many RSO's felt that they were not given adequate notification of their budget hearing. Some felt that had they had more time to prepare, they could have been more effective at their hearing. Rosner said that "Steps will be taken to correct notification procedures for next year, even if by-law changes are necessary."

For many RSO's this week is crucial. They will be lobbying for changes; but not in the by-laws, in the proposed allocations.

Black History Month in Retrospect

"FREEDOM DAYS"

by David Moore
Nummo Staff

Cast members from the play "Freedom Days."

"Freedom Days," written by Steven Friedman and directed and designed by Denny Partridge, is a play of four stories based on true historical incidents and the personal testimony of many veterans of the Civil Rights Movement in the American South. "Freedom Days" opened at Washington Square Church in New York City in February of 1984, and has toured Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and numerous other states.

The opening act is about Rudolph, a white man who got involved in the Civil Rights Movement by writing letters to one of the Freedom Riders and a contact. Rudolph relocated to Birmingham, Ala. After relocating, Rudolph is given a message by the Freedom Riders to deliver to the Governor of Mississippi. While attempting to deliver the letter Rudolph is shot by a store owner he ran into along the way.

In the second act of the play there are people setting up a school in a home called Freedom House. A young girl named Brenda is talking with her mother. It is 1964 and Brenda starts wandering around the neighborhood in this small Mississippi town and soon encounters the Freedom Riders. The Freedom Riders intend to teach courses to the Black children in the community.

Brenda stops going to her regular school to attend the Freedom School and learns French and other subjects that are not taught to Black children in regular schools. While working in the field, Brenda's mother learns Brenda is not attending her regular school.

When the Freedom House is burned down, Brenda's mother learns of all the valuable lessons taught to her daughter while attending classes at the Freedom School. Brenda's mother soon befriends the Freedom school workers and helps them by attempting to register to vote eleven times before being successful at the ballot booth. Brenda's mother died in 1982 as a Registrar of Voters of that Mississippi town.

The third act is about a man and his family. His daughter, Myra and two other Black children are killed in a church bombing. One white man out of three goes to jail for a conviction connected to the bombing. Myra's father was very bitter because it took fifteen years to get a conviction. It was later found out that the F.B.I. was involved in the cover-up of the crime.

The fourth and most graphic story is about a young Civil Rights activist named Clyde and three of his fellow Civil Rights workers. Sister Jesse, a plain-clothes nun is jailed numerous times. E.J., a white male also jailed numerous times, gets beat up by six white prisoners because the guard told them that he was a Civil Rights worker before locking the cell door. Saundra, a college student married to Clyde, often winds up in jail for standing up for their Civil Rights.

Attempting to preserve their dignity, the four workers would never look at each others' faces while in jail. The main character, Clyde, is jailed fifty-five times. Finally, Clyde's spirit is broken.

"ZORA"

by David Moore
Nummo Staff

In honor of Black History Month, the play "ZORA" was performed at Hampden Theatre by students within the Five-College area. The play was derived from a collection of books, short stories, and poems by Zora Neal Hurston, prominent female novelist of the Harlem Renaissance.

The performance began with one of the actors reciting a short biography of Hurston's life, accompanied by slides.

Following the biography, the play opened with the first of three women portraying Zora at various stages of her life. The actress that played Zora in her early life was Wendy Elliot of Mt. Holyoke College. In her portrayal, Zora wanted to be a white woman.

Zora II was portrayed by Celia Hilson, a UMass student. This character was proud of being Black and displayed a vibrancy for life that the earlier and latter characters did not possess.

Zora in the third stage was played by Suyin Lee, an Amherst College student. This Zora was a woman that just wanted to be sexy and did not want to be classified as either Black or white. This ended the first act.

The second act featured three storytellers who acted out some of Hurston's short fables.

The third act was a story about a husband who always announced his arrival from work by tossing nine siver dollars onto the porch. The young wife, Missy, was usually cooking around this time and always happy to hear her husband coming with gifts for her.

Their marriage was soon tested when Otis Slemmons, a city slicker, came to town. Otis told stories about his city life and experiences and of women finding him irresistible because of his wealth and fine clothing. Joe returned home one day to find his wife and "that fast talking" Otis Slemmons in bed.

Joe and Missy's marriage underwent some problems, so much so that the couple were no longer on speaking terms. Joe later found out that his wife was pregnant and feared that the child was not his. After the child's birth it was apparent that it was Joe's. And once again Joe began returning home, tossing nine silver coins onto the porch, receiving the same pleased reaction from his wife that he had once known.

The Augusta Savage Memorial Art Gallery will host an exhibition of the work of eleven Afro-American artists. The artists featured are Houston Conwill, Adger W. Cowans, G. Caliman Coxe, Jeff R. Donaldson, Maren Hassinger, Freida High, Varnette P. Honeywood, William Richards Hutson, Nelson Stevens, Pheoris West and Kenneth Victor Young. Though widely separated geographically, these artists manifest a unity of purpose as they portray our contemporary world in resplendent and exhilarating images. They also depict the shocking contradictions and strange paradoxes in our political life.

A feature of the exhibition is the scope and variety of the work displayed. The chosen examples date from 1976 to 1986. In all, 28 pieces will be shown and they range from the very powerful imagery of the "African Woman" in acrylic by Varnette P. Honeywood to the charismatic qualities in "Muhammad Ali" painted in acrylic by Nelson Stevens. Additionally, the political commentaries in Jeff Donaldson's "Victory in Zimbabwe" and "So/we/to" in mixed media, and the exuberant colors in "Autumn Luminosity" by Kenneth Victor Young will invite the viewer to explore the other variegated experiences that the exhibition displays.

The exhibition though made up of several pieces and executed in a variety of media does impress the viewer as a unit rather than as a collection of different images and forms. This means that the pieces within the exhibition are so well integrated and successfully coordinated that the commonality manifested in the powerful imagery and technical virtuosity of the artist are apparent. This expression of unity comes also from their shared African experience and their ability to integrate this experience into the contemporary Afro-American milieu.

To this exhibition every viewer has to make some response, and the responses will be as many as there are viewers. But one commonality will be evident, and that is the exhibition will present a composite image of our world, drawn from many levels of time, human emotions and consciousness, and expressed through an arrangement of colors, shapes, mass and volumes.

The exhibition will be open to the public on the 8th of March and run through March 28th. The opening reception will be held on Saturday, March 8th, from 12 noon to 7 p.m. We hope the exhibition will introduce viewers to the African aesthetics inherent in the art pieces and extend an invitation to explore exciting facets of our contemporary world through an exemplary collection of paintings.

The presence of racism in the Hampshire College community will be the subject of the first in a series of one-hour tv programs this semester out of Hampshire's television studio, Intran, as a format for Third World students to express their ideas, opinions and talents, it was learned this week.

A coalition of Hampshire College students, "deeply concerned about the presence of racism, sexism, ethnocentrism and heterosexism," have created an independent organization to produce the series, according to a letter sent to interested individuals and organizations in the Five-College area. Pointing out that many of the attitudes leading to racism, sexism, ethnocentrism and heterosexism "emerge out of a lack of knowledge and exposure to diverse ideas and the occurance of events that are happening both nationally and internationally," the coalition maintains that the present media outlets in the Five-College community "do not adequately allow for that exposure to occur."

The format for the series proposes the use of tributes, poetry, music, drama, documentaries "and other appropriate medium."

RUDDOCK

Ruddock's defense said that not only could they not get a person of color on the jury, but that they could not even get a non-white person on the panel to choose the jury.

Judge Salvador Polito convicted Ruddock of the reduced charge of wanton destruction, but Ruddock's lawyers appealed for a jury trial. The all-white jury of two men and four women also gave a guilty verdict.

Ruddock says he feels "scapegoated in what seems like an administration attempt to silence student protest and deprive students of their civil and constitutional rights." He said that the incident "could be easily seen as racially motivated" since it was "so soon after the Yvette Henry case" in which some of the same officers were involved. "I feel really distrustful of UMass," said Ruddock. "I don't trust this place any more."

PERSONALS

The production crew for this week's NUMMO would like to thank David Moore for that wonderful Maya Angelou piece that he didn't do. We also appreciate all the careful time you didn't take planning production or any other aspect of the paper. (Acting Editor?)

And we'd like to especially thank Donna Henry for that bold 56-line story she said she'd do last week, and particularly for that crucial front-page apartheid story she didn't pass in this week. These are just the qualities we need in a managing editor or news editor.

There's nothing more thrilling than waiting for stories that never come and rearranging all that space. Again, we say thanks, and KEEP FILLING OUT THOSE 10 HOUR PAYSLIPS!

Fireworks erupt over SGA budget

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate Budgets Committee defended its fiscal 1987 budget last night before nearly 100 people, most of whom were angry about proposed cuts in student groups' funds.

The committee recommended 37 registered student organizations receive funding cuts -- with 14 having their funding eliminated -- while 17 RSOs are to receive increases. All "political" organizations will not get SGA funding because they are able to solicit outside funding, the committee said.

Many voiced dissatisfaction with the committee's explanation that a fiscal crisis necessitated the cuts. At one point, as two audience members argued, student senator David Moore, an editor of Nummo News, urged the crowd to stay unified in opposing the committee.

According to the proposal, $84,243.73 is available for RSOs. Committee Chairman Jordan Rosner said the amount is "nothing, it's dust," and stressed that the committee's main goal was to balance the budget.

"Do you think we should fund only Third World groups? Everyone got cut." – Lynne McCabe, SGA Budgets Committee

John Ruddock, Undergraduate Student Senate speaker, received applause when he asked rhetorically, "What is a political group? If the Budgets Committee is cutting political organizations, doesn't it seem logical that the SGA is a political organization?"

One person was cheered when he asked why the Amateur Radio Club was funded for the first time when "more important groups" like Drum, the African Students Association and University Peacemakers had their funding eliminated.

David Moore, an editor of Nummo News, calls on audience members to be unified in questioning the SGA Budgets Committee. At left is Lynne McCabe, a committee member.

Rosner said, "The radio club is part of a ham radio network across the United States. It is free for any student to send a message anywhere in the free world.

"We discovered Drum magazine was a class, Afro-Am 217 (Contemporary Black Image Making)." The SGA bylaws do not provide funding for groups associated with athletic or academic departments, fraternities or sororities, Rosner said.

Nelson Stevens, faculty advisor for Drum, said, 'We have been funded for the past eight years. I don't know if this is the brightest student government we've ever come up against. The eight governments before this knew the score."

Christine Alibrandi of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy criticized cuts in money for "organizations dealing with Third World issues."

Committee member Lynne M. McCabe replied, "Do you think we should only fund Third World groups? Everyone got cut."

Committee member Mark W. Johnson said 57 percent of the budget was allocated to Third World groups such as AHORA, Nummo News and the Asian Students Organization.

During the meeting, SGA co-president Dani Burgess told the Collegian he is negotiating for a waiver of the $84,000 "full costing" charge used to pay internal operation costs to the University. He said the money might be given to the groups which received no funding.

But Rosner said if the full costing charge becomes availible, the money would go into the SGA capital equipment fund.

SAFA hears attacks on deficit bill

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON – US Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Pittsfield, and aides to several other legislators yesterday used the occasion of visits by financial aid lobbyists from the University of Massachusetts to deride the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-reduction law as a threat to education.

Conte, donning a red University of Massachusetts baseball hat, repeated his charge that legislators who seek to balance the budget through the law "are willing to wipe out a whole slew of domestic programs, including education."

Conte's remarks came in a prepared address to 46 UMass students lobbying this week on Capitol Hill for continued legislative support for financial aid to higher education.

The UMass group, Students Advocating Financial Aid, is targeting members of the House and Senate Appropriations, Budget and Finance Committees and legislators seeking reelection.

Not everyone on Capitol Hill says Gramm-Rudman is a disaster for education. Page 3.

The SAFA members set about their task early yesterday morning, making appointments and meeting with lawmakers and their aides.

"Education is not simply a cost, but an investment," SAFA member Paul Godfrey said during a meeting with an aide to Senate Finance Committee Chairman Robert Packwood (R-Ore.). "The government has the means to provide equality for opportunity. It is essential that those who have the desire have the opportunity."

Although the impact of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings on financial aid at UMass is uncertain, $70,000 has already been slashed from the National Direct Student Loan fund, said Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid at the University, who is here with SAFA.

An aide to Rep. Edward Boland (D-Springfield) said eeucation may be hurt deeply by the law.

"Some members are trying to circumvent the effects of Gramm-Rudman," Marty Dunn, the aide, said. "They're beginning to see what kind of a monster they've created."

An aide to Rep. James Wright (D-Texas), the House majority leader and a member of the House Budget Committee, said Wright had voted for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings "because he saw no other choice." However, he added that Wright did not favor any cuts in financial aid.

Doug Ewing of SAFA said the group is also trying to counter the myth conjured up by Education Secretary William Bennett that college students are apathetic and waste financial aid on stereos and spring break trips.

"We come down here and talk to the legislators," he said. "We show them students care and are willing to take a stand."

Kenneth Rosenberg, an aide to Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, who opposed the deficit law, said Glenn views the cuts as "devastating" and that without education the US would have "no real culture, no economy."

Anne Wexler, a Washington lobbyist who is married to UMass Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, gave an off-the-record talk to SAFA members yesterday afternoon on the intricacies of lobbying.

New conduct code nears approval

BY SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Staff

The Code of Student Conduct, which has not been redrafted since the 1960s, has been updated by a joint student-faculty committee and is due to go before the Board of Trustees, said Robert Brooks, associate dean of students.

The revision process has dragged on for two years, with 16 drafts prepared and student leaders consistently charging that administrators want to add provisions that violate students' civil liberties.

"We felt certain concerns weren't addressed properly," Brooks said. "We wanted to address them more definitively and directly rather than tangentally."

Brooks said the major changes in the code are more support and advocacy for the rights of victims, particularly victims of racial, sexual-orientation and gender harassment.

Other revisions include: a prohibition on tampering with University computer files; clarification of the offenses and penalties of misrepresenting oneself; and changing judicial procedures and sanctions in the residence halls.

"It's more of an educational document in addition to being regulatory," said Charmaine Wijeysinghe, assistant to the vice-chancellor for student affairs.

Some Student Government Association members said they feel the code exceeds the University's judicial requirements and that the Student Affairs Office is overstepping its bounds.

Stacy Roth, SGA co-president, said the final document that came out of Vice-Chancellor Dennis L. Madson's office did not illuminate the points that students and administrators had been able to agree upon in the joint committee.

Roth said students had negotiated primarily with Dean of Students William F. Field, but that Field had "more or less washed his hands of this last summer [1985]."

John Ruddock, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, said, "The major concern with the document is that it clearly attempts to protect the University more than the students."

In some cases the document abridges certain fundamental and constitutional rights, such as freedom of assembly, Ruddock and other student leaders have asserted.

One oft-criticized revision is the provision for interim restrictions on students before a hearing has taken place. No such provision existed in December 1983, when Field suspended Yvette I. Henry, a student accused of arson, soon after she was arrested. In a multimillion-dollar lawsuit against UMass and law enforcement officials -- recently settled out of court for an undisclosed sum -- Henry charged Field and the University with illegal suspension. The arson charge was later dropped.

The new code gives the University the authority "to take immediate action prior to an informal hearing to impose restrictions on a student if he or she is seen to pose an imminent threat to people or property of the University."

"The administration is attempting to cover itself in cases of perceived 'imminent threats' such as sit-ins, mass demonstrations and the like," Ruddock said.

The revisions began March 15, 1984, when three student affairs staff members prepared the first rough draft of the code. They sent it to the SGA Attorney General at that time, Susan Gladwyn, on March 28, 1984.

Over the two-year period, a total of 16 drafts were jointly reviewed by administrators and SGA representatives.

The final draft was forward to University President David Knapp on Dec. 27, 1985.

The last document to be reviewed by the SGA was on March 1, 1985, but there had been "sporadic contact between the SGA and Student Affairs Office" since then, according to Ruddock.

The code is currently being reviewed by the University counsel, William Searson, to ascertain that it meets legal standards, Brooks said. It has already been reviewed by the associate counsel, Sidney Myers.

The next scheduled step is review by the University Board of Trustees, on which SGA co-president Dani Burgess holds a seat.

Weddington: 'Women's issues are global'

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

Sarah Weddington, the lawyer who won the famous Roe v. Wade case in which women gained the right to legal abortions, last night urged women the world over to communicate with each other and consolidate the struggle for women's rights.

"Women's issues are global. I believe we've made a great deal of progress in the last ten years, but there is a great deal more to be done," said Weddington, who spoke to about 45 people in the Student Union Ballroom to kick off International Women's Event, which runs all this week.

"Economics, reproductive rights, child care, hunger and poverty affect women all over the world," Weddington said.

She defined the "International Women's Network," the topic of her speech, as an effort for women to learn about women from other parts of the world, and said that the network has worked in a very positive way.

However, she said many problems for women still remain. "There is almost a backlash where women's issues are concerned," she said, referring to White House aide Donald Regan's comment last fall that women are "only interested in human interest stories," not issues of substance.

"In the '70s we saw changes in policies. Right now, the women's movement is quiet," Weddington said. She encouraged women educate themselves and to "care about other people" in order to sustain the progress women have made over the last 10 years.

"I think we have to work very hard just to maintain the advances women have made in the past," she said.

She said that women make up more than half of the world population, yet own less than one percent of the property and receive only 10 percent of the total world income.

"In other countries women have just won the right to vote. In Pakistan a law was proposed recently that would allow the testimony of two women to take that of one man," she said. Weddington said women in the United States are very fortunate compared to women in other countries.

She said women need to voice their opinions on issues that concern them by attending rallies, such as the "March for Women's Lives" in Washington on March 9, which will seek to uphold a woman's right to have a legal abortion if she chooses.

Weddington, who currently practices law in Austin, Texas, was the first woman ever elected to the Texas House of Representatives, where she served 3 terms. She has served as general counsel of the US Department of Agriculture. She was also President Carter's advisor on women's issues. She co-headed the American delegation to last summer's United Nations conference in Nairobi as part of the United Nations "Decade for Women."

Time magazine in 1979 named her one of the "outstanding young American leaders." In 1980 Ladies Home Journal presented her with its "Women of the Future" award.

"Making a life ... is doing things to help people in our lives or in other countries," she said. "College is important to learn to make a living, but I also think it's important to make a life."

FYI: SGA candidates square off tonight

Candidates running for the Student Government Association positions of student trustee and campus president will debate each other at 7 p.m. tonight in room 165 of the Campus Center.

Each candidate will make a two-minute opening statement and then have 90 seconds to answer questions from a panel made of a representives from the Collegian and WMUA.

Those running for trustee are Denise Forbes, Hank Pierce, John Galt Sparks, John Hunt, Dani Burgess, and Dan Valianti.

Running for campus president are Bill Bennett, Jason Talerman, M Lynn Murphy, and Ted Capodilupo.

Dr. Ralph H.G. Siu will speak tonight at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall Lounge on panetics, the study of what makes people inflict suffering on others.

Siu received a doctorate in bio-organic chemistry from the California Institute of Technology in 1943. He worked in the US Army for 35 years, and served as director of the National Institute for Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice. Since 1968 he has been a consultant for several corporations, which he refuses to identify. He has just completed a book on panetics which is the seventh in a series exploring psychological and philosophical issues.

Professional personnel consultant Arthur Pell will give a lecture titled "Getting That Great Job -- How to Even the Odds," at 8 p.m. today in the Student Union Ballroom.

Pell will distribute free resume guides and speak about trade secrets used to make hiring decisions.

Pell has written 27 books and consulted with more than 50,000 managers and potential employees on hiring. The lecture is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Extinguisher incident leads to scuffle

A resident assistant received minor injuries when he was assaulted by three men at 12:43 a.m. Saturday in McNamara House, University of Massachusetts police said.

The men, who were spraying a fire extinguisher out of the window of the dormitory, hit the assistant when he confronted them. He refused treatment, police said.

In other police reports:

- Five wallets and pocketbooks were reported stolen in seprate incidents early Saturday morning in Washington Tower. Two of the wallets and a pocketbook were recovered on the 19th floor and one wallet was recovered on the fifth floor, police said.
- A 20-year-old man was arrested on warrants after he was seen holding a handgun at 10:21 p.m. Friday between Patterson House and John Quincy Adams Tower. The pistol was plastic, but while doing a routine identification check, police said they discovered he had traffic warrants from Auburn.
- A lit candle burning on a plastic record cover caused a minor fire at 2:45 a.m. Friday on the seventh floor of Coolidge Tower. The Amherst Fire Department and Environmental Health and Safety officials extinguished the fire, police said.
- A pipe to a water fountain was broken and flooded a hall at 3:30 a.m. Saturday in Gorman House. It was broken because a man tried to rip the fountain from the wall, police said.

Lawmakers are divided on Gramm-Rudman law

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON -- The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-reduction law, which March 1 took its first scheduled swipe at the federal deficit, is designed to balance the US budget by 1991.

Yesterday, the bill took a beating from some House members and Senate staff, some of whom addressed Students Advocating Financial Aid, a group of 46 University of Massachusetts students here for four days to lobby for financial aid support.

Two of the legislators, US Reps. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., and Robert Roe, D-NJ, criticized the bill for its shortsightedness toward education and its possible unconstitutionality in taking budget powers away from elected legislators.

However, in telephone interviews, aides to Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and Ernest Hollings, D-SC, defended the bill, maintaining that without some form of legislation designed to cut the deficit, education would suffer.

"All Gramm-Rudman means is that we have to reduce the federal deficit over the next five years," said Dorothy Seder, assistant to Hollings. "While I wouldn't like to see any cut, that's not decriminating education."

A spokesman for Gramm took Seder's comments one step further.

"It [deficit] will certainly destroy the ability of any graduate to get a job when he gets out," said the spokesman, Lawrence Neal.

Conte, in his office shortly after delivering a prepared speech to SAFA, said he disagrees.

"First of all, there is going to be a lot of them [students] who won't graduate because the money won't be there and they can't afford it," Conte said. "That is a devious assault they throw at you."

After the March 1 cuts, Arthur Jackson, director of UMass financial aid, estimated UMass has lost $70,000 in student aid.

But Jackson, who is with SAFA here, said the state of financial aid at UMass will remain uncertain until the school is notified by the US Department of Education of further cuts.

Approximately 60 percent of students at UMass/Amherst receive some form of financial aid, Jackson said.

Rep. Roe, who is staying at the same hotel as SAFA, said in an interview in the hotel's lobby that education should not be sacrificed to cutting the federal deficit, which has now reached more than $200 billion.

"The minds of the country are the greatest assets," Roe said. "There is no point in putting that on a priority basis. The question is: Do we shoot each other up, or do we go ahead and help the future?"

financial aid have been achieved since SAFA began lobbying here eight years ago.

However, he cautioned that the deficit bill may endanger some of those gains.

"Gramm-Rudman-Hollings ... has its priorities, and those priorities are anti-education," he said.

Sell-out business

Ron Berutti

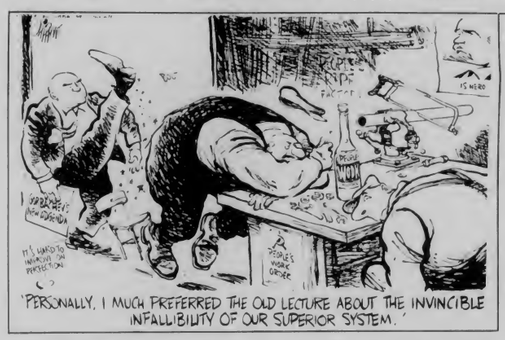
For most of my life, I have been a big fan of rock music. Like many others, I started out with the Beach Boys and the Beatles, and then went through a Led Zeppelin stage. Since then, I have become fond of all rock bands and many soul bands that produce a fresh, crisp sound of their own. What bothers me about many of today's artists is that they sound like regurgitations of every other artist that has recently climbed into the American Top 40. This is about some of those artists who have compromised their musical quality for high success; those who have, in effect, sold out for money.

The worst thing ever to happen to the rock music industry has been music television or MTV. Rarely does MTV stray from showing videos made by Top 40 artists. This made many musicians realize that producing a mindless video to accompany a poor song could net them millions of dollars in extra record sales because of the MTV exposure. In order to get on MTV, all a musician had to do was to find a catchy beat and match some uncomplicated lyrics to it, then shoot a film with lots of pretty women in it, and the song became an instant hit.

Paul McCartney is a perfect example of this behavior. McCartney has written some of the greatest songs of all time. In his years with the Beatles, he molded the music standards that everybody else tried to follow. He was never content with his music, so he was constantly progressing and changing it.

Today, McCartney writes nothing but simple Pop 40 songs that follow the standards set by everybody else. The man who was once a leader in the music industry is now writing money-making garbage. His songs sound real, but like condensed milk after water has been added, his songs leave one with a bad aftertaste.

Darryl Hall and John Oates used to be good songwriters. A few years ago, they came out with a hit song called "Maneater," which is not a bad song. However, Hall and Oates have released about 10 songs since then that have sounded just like "Maneater." Each has made the Top 40. They have become a duo that has compromised their songwriting quality in order to make money. They have found the recipe for a successful song.



Of all the musicians who have sold out, I am most disappointed with my personal favorite, Elvis Costello (a.k.a. Declan Alouiscious Patrick Macmannus). In 1978, he wrote a song titled "Radio Radio" in which he bitterly lashed out at the practice by many radio stations of not allowing "different" music to be played on the air. He said that "radio is in the hands of such a lot of fools trying to anesthetize the way that you can feel," but by 1984, he also became anesthetized by the Top 40. In a song called "The Only Flame In Town," Costello sold out by using Darryl Hall to sing the song with him. Elvis, who was once called an "angry young man" by the musical press was now singing songs with the king of Top 40.

There have been many others who have sold out, but don't get me wrong, just because a band reaches the Top 40 or makes a video does not mean that it has sold out. For instance, the band Dire Straits produced one of the best selling songs of 1985 called "Money for Nothing." They used the line "I want my MTV" as a hollow, mindless background cry; maybe that is why the song sold so well. This song, however, is mocking musicians who are receiving "money for nothing" because they mindlessly "play their guitars on the MTV" without really having any idea as to what it takes to make a quality song. It is this mindlessness that has helped such awful bands as Wham!, Wang Chung, Duran Duran and Loverboy make megabucks.

It is a good thing that quality music can still be heard in some corners from bands such as Dire Straits, the Joe Jackson Band, the Pretenders, the Clash, U2, and from such newer bands as the Hooters, and the Klemmies. These bands are either following their own diverse directions, or else they are chastising the American Top 40 culture while still producing high quality music.

Despite assurances, petition fails

As a UMass RSO, the International Students Association can look back with pride on 23 years of operation as an apolitical, popular and effective representational organization for the diverse international population of this University. Throughout that time, the cultural and social needs of the international students have been met without any form of assistance from the student funding bodies. From that early start, the ISA has worked closely with the Foreign Student Office, to make UMass not only a flagship state university, but also one of world class stature.

Last month marked the first time ever that the ISA has appeared before the SGA Budget Committee requesting additional funds. The 23rd International Fair which is scheduled to be held on April 12th, is a major display of the cultural wealth and diversity of our international community. Last year, the Fair was visited by over 4,000 people in little over 6 hours. The money we applied for was intended to support our other programs so as to free funds to accomodate the expansion of this event.

Despite verbal assurances from the full Budget Committee at our hearing that our application would be approved, subject only to a full Senate vote, we find that our petition for funds failed even to make the final list to be submitted to the Senate. In a word, our budget has been truly "Marcosed." It is not our style to sally forth behind an offensive screen of fictional charges of incompetence, insensitivity and betrayal. That would be an unjustified insult to a committee that has obviously carried out a difficult job under adverse financial conditions.

The Budget Committee appreciated the fact that we attempted to do our own fundraising. We were not challenged on any substantial point in our budget. So obviously we were not given any clues as to what led the SGA Budget Committee to decide not to give us any support. Equally strange is the fact that the groups that do not attempt, or manage, to raise revenue get support from the SGA. It seems to be the case that a group that successfully raises a substantial amount of its own funds is penalized. In order to expand and develop as an RSO that has reached the limits of its fund-raising ability under current conditions, we have asked for some monetary support, but for reasons unknown to us we were turned down.

Those coffee survivors

Rusty Denton

It is 4 a.m. and I have just turned into the Grinch. The metamorphosis occured sometime between page 219 and the most recent slurp of oily coffee which I am now scowling at darkly. I am certain that somewhere in the puddle at the bottom of the mug there are carcinogens just waiting to be identified, cavorting happily with radical halogenations and alkyl rearrangements, but for now I'll have to let my liver sort them out.

I've had just about enough of this particular blend of heartburn, but there's something wonderfully sinister about swigging a punk extract and being in a bad mood at the same time. It almost gives me the courage to go out and throttle my professor, if only my heart would stop palpitating and my bowels would quiet down. If I didn't know better I'd swear the stuff had fiber in it.

I heard somewhere that soft drinks have more caffeine. It's true; a six-pack of Mountain Dew is stronger than espresso. But somehow feeling bloated by carbonation is less attractive than snarling at the grounds in the bottom of the cup. On the other hand, soft drink breath isn't still marching through your day eight hours later. Coffee breath and coffee stomach seem to be about as independent as the common cold, but if you want to stay awake, that's the price you pay.

And what a price. Not being a regular java-hound, what I drink is the cheap stuff. When it's time to stay awake, it gets poured into the kettle by the carload and heated until a murky sludge emerges with a life of its own. At this point I have to say a prayer over it, lest it consume me faster than I consume it.

The rest of the night is just nasty. I have never understood how a beverage could smell so good while brewing and taste so dastardly in the cup. Drinking coffee for me rates right up there with having the flu. Coffee is like the first whiff of manure in the spring, the first fall of slush in the winter. I go for months trying to avoid having that first cup roll around in the bottom of my belly, doing its bitter best.

And it is thin. There is nothing satisfying about a mouthful of dilute alkaloids. I have a sneaking suspicion they're altering the DNA in the lining of my mouth, so I try to swallow it as quickly as possible. This is easier said than done, since the stuff is remotely palatable only when it is too hot for human consumption.

I'm almost beginning to wonder if this scalding edition of liquid nerves is counterproductive. I'm too wired to taker Colombian peasant sweated over. Believe me, I'd boycott if I could help it, but I'd rather burn out than drop out.

Somewhere out there are millions of coffee afficionados, slurping and dunking their way to success. No doubt they like it. They're probably immune to it by now. Not me. I am not a coffee achiever; I'm a coffee survivor.

Afro-centric experience presented by gallery

Arranged to represent the diversity of visual perception with the Afro-centric experience of art, one of the greatest exhibits assembled in this decade will be open for viewing in the Augusta Savage Memorial Art Gallery from March 8 through March 28.

Featuring 28 pieces from renowned artists like Nelson Stevens, professor in the Art and Afro-American Studies Departments, Jeff R. Donaldson, former chairman of the Art Department and Gallery Director at Howard University and recently (1985) appointed associate dean of the College of Fine Arts, Varnette Honeywood, painter and teacher, Adger Cowans, a photographer and painter who has worked on numerous Hollywood films as a still photographer, including the recent Cotton Club, directed by Frances Ford Coppola, On Golden Pond with Jane and Henry Fonda and Live and Let Die, and Freida High, a painter and art historian and also a professor in the Department of Afro-American Studies at the University of Wisconsin.

"The exhibition, though made up of several pieces and executed in a variety of media, will impress the viewers as a unit rather than a collection of different images and form," said gallery Director and Professor J. V. O. Richards.

For gallery Curator Marilyn E., "....this is an outstanding collection of some of the finest contemporary black artists from across the U.S. and truly an educational experience that should not be missed."

The collection includes work from exhibits that date from 1976 to 1986.

Richards hopes that responses will be made by many viewers and encouraged every viewer to make a response.

An opening reception will be held from 12 to 7 p.m. this Saturday in the gallery at room 101 of the New Africa House.

Belafonte scraps Senate bid

NEW YORK (AP) - Singer Harry Belafonte, citing commitments to the black struggle in South Africa and the fight against world hunger, announced yesterday that he would not seek the Democratic nomination for U.S. Senate.

Belafonte, at a news conference, said he had been encouraged by Gov. Mario M. Cuomo, other politicians, and citizens to oppose incumbent Sen. Alfonse D'Amato. However, he said, "The opportunity came at a time that was totally inappropriate."

Leading Democrats had predicted earlier that Belafonte would not run.

Belafonte came to national attention in 1956 with the Calypso hit "Jamaica Farewell." He quickly branched out into acting and was featured in such movies as the 1957 hit "Island in the Sun." He was a close supporter of the Rev. Martin Luther King during the civil rights movement of the 1960s and has recently been involved in campaigns such as USA for Africa to fight hunger.

Belafonte said yesterday he consulted with South African activist Winnie Mandela regarding activities for her and her imprisoned husband, Nelson. Belafonte said she told him that if he ran for the Senate, "I'd have to relegate my responsibilities to somebody else."

Belafonte, who turned 59 on Saturday, had been encouraged to challenge D'Amato by those who felt the entertainer had the name recognition and fun-raising ability needed to unseat the Republican D'Amato.

Late last year, Brooklyn District Attorney Elizabeth Holtzman and former vice-presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro announced they wouldn't seek the Democratic nomination to run against D'Amato.

Hannah and her sisters: Allen's mature masterwork

MOVIE REVIEW

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Hannah and Her Sisters Written and Directed by Woody Allen Starring Allen, Mia Farrow, Barbara Hershey, Dianne Wiest and Michael Caine. (Four Stars)

This is the review I've been waiting all year to do. Woody Allen's latest film is great and it is by far his best film ever. Hannah and Her Sisters is the most emotionally complex, funny and satisfying film Allen has ever made. Even if you are not an Allen fan, you must see this movie.

The story begins at a family Thanksgiving party (a la Fanny and Alexander) with Michael Caine quietly lusting after Hannah's (Mia Farrow) sister Lee. The only problem is that Lee (Barbara Hershey) is Caine's sister-in-law. Caine decides he must either declare his love for Lee or go crazy. The other major plot in the film involves Hannah's hypochondriacal first husband Mickey (Woody Allen) who may finally have something wrong with him.

Although this film is very funny, in it Allen explores serious emotions, moral and existential dilemmas. Allen said recently, that he thought Hannah was his most serious film. I would agree and add that it is also his most mature film to date.

In the future film historians may look at Allen's work as different stages of development. As Picaso had red, blue and Cubist periods in his painting, so can Allen's film oeuvre be divided into his Louise Lasser, Dianne Keaton and Mia Farrow periods.

The Lousie Lasser period included Allen's rough, anything-for-a-joke films (Take The Money and Run, Bananas, Everything You Wanted To Know About Sex, etc.) These films, while funny, never really coalesced into a satisfiying whole.

In the Dianne Keaton period Allen explored the structure of stories and the structure of film. Until his award winning Annie Hall, the comedy in these films was mainly situational. Characters (other than Allen's) were not really fleshed out, they only served for the joke. After Annie Allen's films delved more into character and relationships, but these films suffered from a certain despairing lifelessness.

The one word the describes the Mia Farrow period is "sweet". In these films, Allen dealt sensitively with people's hopes and self-images. Technically Allen is now very secure in his filmmaking ability. Secondary characters now are more flesh than joke.

Hannah and Her Sisters marks the culmination of Allen's comedic talent and filmmaking development. This film auteur has given us his greatest masterwork to date.

JAROSLAV PELIKAN: Jesus Through the Centuries; His Place in the History of our Culture. (Yale University Press, $25.00) BOB DYLAN: Lyrics 1962-1985. (Knopf, $21.95)

The comparisons between Bob Dylan and Jesus of Nazareth have been made before: both have long hair, both are Jewish (and Christian), both have fan clubs, both have been hailed as prophets, both have been around for a long time.

The Gospel According to Bob has been collected in a new volume of lyrics, an extention of Writings and Drawings, published in 1973. The book spans his entire opus from his first album through last year's Empire Burlesque, although his 1966 novel, Tarantula, is unfortunately omitted. Dylan needs no praise beyond the invocation of his name. He is among the small circle of songwriters whose lyrics stand even without musical accompaniment. The transcendent triumph of his latest album more than make up for the embarassing spirtuals written during his Catholic conversion.

Speaking of Catholic conversion, according to Jaroslav Pelikan's Jesus Through the Centuries, Christians have interpreted the cultural significance of Jesus in many different ways since he first made his presence known. The importance of the Church's influence in the development of the Western world cannot be underestimated: To understand changes in the cultural interpretation of Jesus aids immeasurably in understanding the stages of modern civilization.

Jesus has symbolized concepts such as rabbi in the first century, martyr in the middle ages, universal man in the Renaissance and liberator in modern times. Pelikan deals with some touchy subjects, such as the interpretation of Jesus to justify war. However, he deals only with the doctrines of the most popular branches, and omits mention of many of the smaller sects such as the pietists, etc. He also ignores modern interpretations, such as Mary Daly's feminist work, Beyond God the Father. This is not due to ignorance: Pelikan is a widely respected theologian, award-winning author of numerous works. However, he approaches the material from a considerable bias, and one questions his claim that he is dealing solely with cultural (not theological) interpretations; this is not the secular study it purports to be.

SNACKSENSE ARE SNACKS BAD FOR YOU?
not necessarily.
As long as snacks don't replace nutritious foods or add unneeded calories they aren't bad for anyone. The TROUBLE WITH MOST SNACK FOODS is they aren't nutrient dense, that is THEY DON'T PROVIDE MANY NUTRIENTS FOR THE NUMBER OF CALORIES THEY CONTAIN.
FOR THE SAME AMOUNT OF CALORIES, skim milk gives you 23% of the protein, 39% of the calcium and 36% of the vitamin A and B12 that you need for an entire day, while a cola gives you only carbohydrate.
Sensible snacks are carbohydrates PLUS NUTRIENTS, like fresh fruits and vegetables, whole grain breads, crackers and cereals.

Swim team looks ahead to next year

Yarworth credits Williams for depth

By JOE ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

"I'm glad it's over," The University of Massachusetts men's swim coach Russ Yarworth said in a hoarse, somber voice, "We'll win it next year."

Yarworth spoke of this past weekend's New England championship meet in Springfield, where UMass placed second to Williams College, 842-722. "I was worried about their depth and that's what beat us. We had better top line swimmers but everyone on their team placed except for one. Their bottom five swimmers were better than ours. I don't want to make excuses but, we had a lot going against us with colds and injuries," Yarworth said.

The biggest injury had to be the loss of senior co-captain Pat Mullen. "He tried to dive on the one-meter and just couldn't hold it. That was a loss of fifty points right there," Yarworth explained. Mullen had trouble holding in his tucks while diving due to pulled stomach muscles.

Although his voice sounded disappointed, Yarworth found some good points in both the meet and the season. "We had a good weekend. We swam as good as I thought we would, we just got beat by a better team. We had a great season, I'm not disappointed. This is the best team we've ever had. We won the Division I championship. Next year, we'll have a real good team. I'm working on recruiting already."

Yarworth also pointed to the nine new school records broken this season. Drew Donovan had a part in two relay records as well as holding three individual records. In the 200 freestyle over the weekend, he missed a NE record by a hundreth of a second. Another thing Donovan didn't get this weekend was qualification to the national meet, which is on April 3-5 in Indianapolis. He will enter the 100 and 200 freestyle events this weekend at Harvard in the Eastern championships hoping to qualify.

"There are a lot of kids who qualified for this meet but, Drew is going because he has a shot at nationals," Yarworth said.

Donovan did set three New England records in the 100, 200 and 500 freestyle events. "I did pretty good but, I'm not satisfied. I'm never satisfied," he said.

Individually, Yarworth singled out Rick Bishop and Jim Flannery. "Rick has done a lot to overcome his shoulder surgery He realizes how good he can be," Yarworth said.

"Flannery had a good meet. He was the only person on the team that made it to the finals in every event he was in," Yarworth said. Flannery was sixth in the 500 freestyle, fifth in the 200 freestyle, and part of the fifth place 800 freestyle relay team.

Another factor that hampered the Minutemen's shot at the championship was the pressure. "I expected too much out of the freshman. On Sunday, when they knew they wouldn't win they relaxed and started to swim better," Yarworth said.

Men and women close to top of regional track

Sophomore Steve Tolley took second in the 1,000 for UMass in the New England track championships.

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's track teams each took fourth places in the New England track and field championships over the weekend.

For the men, a pair of sophomores went 2-3 in the 1,000 as Steve Tolley's 2:12.65 and Bill Stewarts's 2:13.17 scored big points for UMass. In the 800, Mike Stead was second with a 1:54.01 while John Pannaccione was third in the 5,000 with a 14:30.49 during the first day.

In the mile, Paul Stanislawzyk was sixth with a 4:19.30. The mile relay saw UMass take third with a 3:20.4 for Larry Cuddy, Neil Osbourne, Rick LaBarge and Rawle Crichlow. The two mile realy saw Nick Watkins, Dan Lunardini, Mark Themea and Ted White take second at 7:43.9. The distance medley team of Stewart, Tolley, Joe hagan and Peter Leary were also second, at 10:05.1.

Northeastern won the meet with 118 points. BU was second, BC third and UMass fourth with 43 points.

The women had two individual winners as junior Barbara Cullinan won the 600 in 1:24.76 while freshman Pam Hughes was first in the 55 with a 7.19. The mile relay saw Cullinan, Chris Bates, Sonja Vaughan and Kayla Morrison take second with a 3:53.40. The 800 relay had Joyce Baten, Kim Baten, Wendy Marshall and Hughes take second with a 1:45.0.

In the long jump, Hughes was fourth while Joyce Baten was seventh. The triple jump saw Julie Muccini take fifth with a school-record 35-10. Kim Baten was fourth in the hurdles with a 8.53 while in the 200, Marshall was third and Kari Fleischman was fifth.

In the 400, Morrison was fourth and Bates fifth. Morrson's time was 57.8 and Bates' 59.1.

"We had some good efforts, I'm pleased," said women's coach Kalekeni Banda. "I agree," said men's coach Ken O'Brien.

Volleyball team away tonight

The University of Massachusetts men's volleyball team is heading west.

The Minutemen will be in a tri-match against Williams College and Middlebury College tonight in Williamstown.

The men have opened up their season on a strong note with an 11-3 record during their first full intercollegiate season.

10 days ago, UMass defeated Williams and Amherst in a tri-meet at Amherst and the Minutemen will be looking to defeat the Ephmen again tonight.

Coach Sue Mudry's team is healthy, with the exception of junior defenseman John Nolan, who is suffering from tendinitis in his right shoulder, the one he uses to hit with.

"We're looking foward to playing Williams and Middlebury, I think we can beat them," said junior outside hitter Roger Chapman. "Williams is tough," cautioned Nolan. "But we're ready."

Baseball, lacrosse prepping for trips

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Believe it. Despite the snow on the ground and the cold weather, the University of Massachusetts baseball team opens its 1986 season a week from Saturday.

Of course, the Minutemen will be hopping a plane and heading for sunny Orlando Beach, Florida to face Yale University in a doubleheader, but the point to be made is that winter sports (for the most part) are over and spring sports are here.

"It's progressing slowly, but progressing," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "We'll scrimmage against Amherst College later this week at their cage then leave for Florida the week after."

UMass will play 44 games this season, facing Yale, Rollins, Eastern Kentucky, Brown and Indiana in Florida. Indiana went 57-19 last season with Eastern Kentucky going 42-29, so UMass wil need to be ready.

"I think we'll do okay," said Bergquist. "It, or course, depends on the pitching, it always does."

One pitcher with UMass this spring during their pre-season pratices is Dimitri Yavis, the football team's All-American freshman punter.

Yavis will be on the roster this season, but will play spring football for the Minutemen. He is expected to play a full baseball season in 1987.

Meanwhile, coach Dick Garber's lacrosse team opens its season a week from Sunday, heading for Colorado Springs to face the Air Force Academy.

Lacrosse magazine said the Air Force will be one of the best Western teams this season and will have the best team in the academy's history.

"They're no cupcake team, that's for sure," said Garber, who's entering his 32nd season at the UMass helm. "We'll have to be ready."

The Gorillas (who aren't they the Minutemen? It's a long story, but trust me, call them the Gorillas) have been working out on Boyden Gym along with the baseball, softball and women's lacrosse teams, but hopes to use the new Tartan turf floor in the Curry Hicks Cage for workouts. Last week, UMass scrimmaged Brown on the artificial turf in Providence. Springfield College will also give UM a scrimmage this Saturday.

Garber said that several players have shined in the pre-season, including freshman goalie Sal LoCasio, attackmen Pat Cain, Kelley Carr, Ed Boardman, Tom Carmean and juco transfer Greg Canella. Defensively, Tom Aldrich, Gerry Byrne, Chris Knapp, John Jordan and Jeff Salanger have looked sharp. Tom Bonnet, Adam Rodell, Paul McCarty and Scott Craig have also played well according to the coach.

Mike Tomasello, a former baseball player, has also played well for the Gorillas.

Cleared START members miffed

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

Two of the students who were cleared of mass disturbance charges by the vice-chancellor for student affairs yesterday blasted University of Massachusetts administrators' handling of the case.

"It seems the administration has been embarassed into doing justice," said Tim Kress, a student originally found guilty by a hearing board but declared innocent by Vice-Chancellor Dennis Madson in a ruling made public Thursday.

Madson overturned the Kress guilty verdict and cancelled the hearings of three other students after a hearing board found eight more members of Students Advocating Rights Together not guilty of similar charges. Four START members were cleared in January.

The students were charged by the University with inciting a mass disturbance in violation of the Code of Student Conduct. The charges stemmed from a December 5 protest during which 18 students were arrested. They were protesting the administration's taking control of certain student activities funds.

Madson's office prosecuted the students.

Kress, the only student who had been found guilty by a hearing board, said, "I feel great. Justice has been served. It was a sham to declare me guilty in the first place." He said the University had never proven its charges.

"People aren't generally aware of these administrators who are job-for-life state employees. They have no accountability. They step on the rights of students ... [The prosecution of the students] goes hand-in-hand with their attempts to control our money," Kress said.

M. Lynne Murphy, another student found not guilty by the hearing board, said, "I'm thrilled." She said she recived a letter from Madson stating that "they couldn't find us guilty of mass disturbance as phrased in the Student Code, but Madson still felt we should be reprimanded. That was the tone of it."

Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, an assistant to Madson who presented the University's case before the hearing boards that made recommendations to the vice-chancellor, said she was satisfied with Madson's ruling.

"I'm not out to find students guilty," Wijeyesinghe said. "I'm out to make sure the process was sound."

Noting Madson's overruling of the board's decision in the Kress case, she said, "He looked at the findings and said one out of thirteen was found guilty. It's not consistent with the finding of the rest of the boards."

Madson was unavailable for comment yesterday.

Twelve START protesters have been found not guilty, one -- Kress -- had a guilty finding overturned, and three had hearings cancelled. Several others signed an "administrative agreement" and were placed on probation for one year.

Globe vaporizes Tower Library

UMass students who read the Learning pages in Sunday's Boston Globe saw Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's essay on the importance of public higher education. But they may also have been puzzled and amused by the accompanying photo of the UMass-Amherst campus.

The picture, looking west from North Pleasant Street, showed Thompson Hall, the Old Chapel, grass and lush willow trees -- the latter right where the Tower Library should have been.

Nobody in the Globe's Sunday department or library could determine what year the photo was taken, since it usually takes several days for a picture to make its way back to the files after it has been used. But campus history indicates it was taken at least 17 years ago: Construction of the library began in 1969.

AIDS information made available

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Many people incorrectly believe acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) can be caught from a toilet seat, by donating blood, or by shaking a gay man's hand. People have said it is a wrath from God against gay men.

The Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns, working in conjunction with the University of Massachusetts Health Services, has been working to eliminate these myths by making an information tape about AIDS and holding a series of workshops on safe sex to make more information available.

A tape containing general health information about AIDS and a list of other resources in Massachusetts is available at the Taped Information Phone Service hot line, TIPS.

"The tape does not have information which will be startling to gay men," but it debunks misconceptions about AIDS among the general public, said Reed Ide, co-director of the program.

"It allows people to get the information they need con-

Federal official irks SAFA

'You are not hardship cases'

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — US Undersecretary of Education Bruce Carnes and a group of University of Massachusetts students yesterday squared off over the issue of financial aid during a meeting here.

The meeting, which lasted nearly an hour in a room adjacent to Carnes' office, was characterized by emotional pleas from some of the 46 students to restore some funds to education.

The members of Students Advocating Financial Aid, said their chances of completing college are in danger if President Reagan's fiscal 1987 budget proposal is accepted by Congress.

"This government has the means, it has the capability to help people help themselves," Paul Godfrey, a sophomore economics-political science major and SAFA member, told Carnes.

SAFA members heard encouragement from Sen. Hart but admonishment from Rep. Atkins. Page 3.

"We're not abusers, as Bennett seems to think."

Godfrey was referring to Secretary of Education William Bennett, who last year said students must sacrifice their stereos, cars and trips to Florida if they want to go to college.

Carnes responded, "I find it hard to believe that if your families' circumstances are as dire as you say, you are not going to get aid. You are not hardship cases. You are not disadvantaged cases in this country."

Approximately 60 percent of the 24,000 students at UMass-Amherst receive of some form of financial aid, according to Arthur Jackson, director of UMass financial aid.

President Reagan's 1987 budget proposal calls for $6.143 billion in aid to higher education, a decrease of $1.4 billion from this year's revised budget, according to figures supplied by the Department of Education.

"I am not ashamed of this budget," Carnes said during the meeting, which marked the second of three days that SAFA has been lobbying for support on Capitol Hill.

The gathering with Carnes, in the Health and Human Services Building about a half-mile from the Capitol, was the only time students had an opportunity to meet with a Reagan administration official. Carnes insisted that only the richest seven percent of students receiving aid would be affected by Reagan cuts.

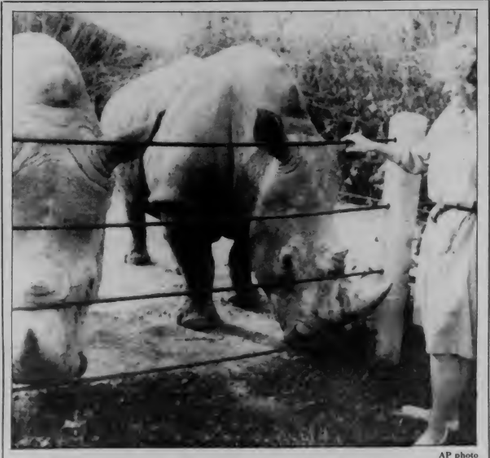
The following exchange took place between Carnes and SAFA menmber David Nelson:

Nelson: "The question is: Are we willing to gamble the future?"

Carnes: "Yes."

Nelson: "Well, I'm not."

Chris Liberatore, SAFA trip coordinator, addressed specifically the national work-study program, which would lose an estimated $300 million under the Reagan budget proposal.



"How do you plan to educate these people and expect them to work 30 hours a week?" Liberatore asked. "I'm exhausted. I can't wait to graduate and get a job and relax."

Carnes, after waiting for the group to stop applauding, said he was not surprised by the reaction, and challenged students to come up with an alternative way to eliminate the federal deficit.

"I don't know enough about SDI," Carnes said, referring to President Reagan's space weapons program. "It would be useful to try and figure out. You can't just print money."

In other events yesterday, Stacy Roth, co-president of the Student Government Association, addressed the House Subcommittee on Post Secondary Education, stressing the effects of cuts in financial aid.

"At UMass alone, we process some type of financial awards for approximately 18,000 graduate and undergraduate students," Roth testified. "Based upon the proposed FY 87 budget, our University would stand to lose between 4,000 and 5,000 students who are currently receiving aid. We find this unacceptable and dangerous toward the future of an educated America."

Botha may lift state of emergency on Friday

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha announced that the 195-day-old state of emergency imposed to fight anti-apartheid turmoil in South Sfrica probably would be lifted on Friday.

His announcement yesterday was praised by the US and was given a cautious welcome from some South African liberals. But it provoked expressions of concern from the largest anti-apartheid grouping, the United Democratic Front, that the emergency would be supplanted by repressive legislation.

Botha also made a new offer of statehood for Namibia, proposing an Aug. 1 target date for starting moves toward the territory's independence. He made it conditional on a withdrawal of Cuban troops from neighboring Angola.

Police reported two blacks were killed by security officers. They said police shotgun fire killed a man in the western Transvaal province and a youth died of injuries suffered when police quelled a riot in Potchefstroom, southwest of Johannesburg.

They also reported that two whites were seriously hurt when their car was stoned in the south of the country.

Botha made his announcements to a packed parliamentary chamber in the country's legislative capital.

He claimed the level of violence had dropped sufficiently to enable him to issue a proclamation, "most probably this coming Friday," to lift the state of emergency.

But critics of the system of racial segregation that keeps power in the hands of South Africa's white minority said they could not readily explain the timing of Botha's announcement. They insisted that the level of violence had not dropped.

The emergency, imposed July 21 on 30 urban and rural districts and subsequently lifted from seven, gives police and troops sweeping powers to use guns against rioters and detain suspects indefinitely without trial. It has been widely condemned abroad, and its removal is a primary demand of anti-apartheid activists.

Botha also said Parliament would be asked to review existing laws in case new ones were needed to help "protect lives and property effectively."

The United Democratic Front, a multiracial coalition of anti-apartheid groups, said lifting the emergency would be an "acknowledgement that the emergency has failed to suppress the desire of our people to be free."

But the organization expressed concern at Botha's mention of new laws, saying: "The government is going to broaden the already Draconian provisions of the Internal Sercurity Act. The effect of this is that a de facto state of emergency will exist throughout our country."

Swedish police have witness to Palme's murder

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Authorities said yesterday that a cab driver saw Olof Palme's assassin leap into a car and speed away with at least one accomplice seconds before police arrived at the scene of the murder.

They offered a reward of $70,000 in hopes of tempting an accomplice to betray the man who shot the 59-year-old prime minister in the back Friday night on a well-lighted street in downtown Stockholm.

"There was at least one person in the getaway car," Stockholm Police Chief Sune Sandstroem told The Associated Press. He said police arrived seconds after the assassin's car raced away on the snow-covered street.

A witness to the shooting said earlier that he chased Palme's killer on foot, but lost him.

Police Commissioner Hans Holmer told a news conference about the taxi driver's report. He said the driver noted only part of the license number, and police would not describe the vehicle.

"I hope there are people sheltering or who have sheltered this man who are willing to turn him in," Holmer said in announcing the reward.

The commissioner rejected growing criticism of the way police have handled the investigation.

Critics say Stockholm authorities were too slow in sealing off the murder site and escape routes, and in deploying police patrols. They also said police did not provide enough protection for the prime minister, but Palme often dismissed his bodyguards and had done so earlier Friday.

Palme and his wife, Lisbet, were walking home from a movie premiere when the assassin attacked.

"We did all that one could possible expect of us," Holme said.

Holmer told the conference investigators had received 4000 tips about the case and questioned 600 people.

He said 100 were interrogated extensively, and arrests in unrelated cases had resulted.

Police have said they were advised of several claims of responsibility for the murder made by callers claiming to represent West Germany's terrorists Red Army Faction or related groups.

The Red Army Faction, formerly known as the Baader-Meinhof Gang, and other left-wing West German terrorists normally confine operations to their own county, attacking US and NATO facilities or prominent government and industrial figures.

Shultz: Nicaraguan aid is a moral duty for US

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Geore Shultz told a House panel yesterday the US has a moral duty to supply aid to Nicaraguan rebels trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government.

In an appearance before a House Appropriations subcommittee, Shultz painted the situation in Central America in stark and simple terms, calling the Contras "the good guys," and the Sandinistas "the bad guys" and "a very undesirable cancer in the area."

He said the administration believes it has a moral imperative to "support those people...willing to fight for freedom and independence."

Although the administration's request for $100 million in aid to the Contras is its immediate priority, Shultz' appearance before the the subcommittee was mostly to lobby for the administration's overall foreign aid budget.

The panel chairman, Rep. David Obey, (D-Wis.), told Shultz that Congress will not approve President Reagan's request for a $15.5 billion foreign aid budget and directed him "back to the drawing board."

Obey said the proposal for fiscal 1987 is 16.2 percent above actual foreign aid spending for fiscal 1986.

The proposed military aid package to the Contras is already intensely controversial, and Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia yesterday named a group of 11 senators, headed by Sen. James Sasser, (D-Tenn.), to help form a Democratic policy on the issue.

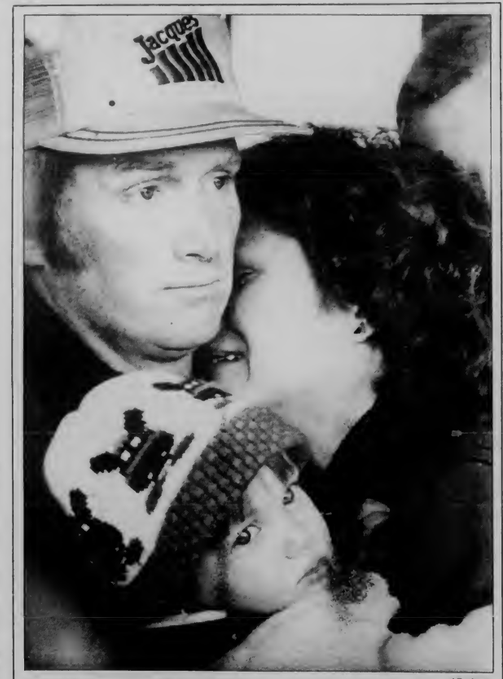
In the House, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. Called on the administration to reopen negotiations aimed at producing a peaceful solution to the problems rather than rely on "military firepower."

Marcos may have made off with $10b from Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) - The government of Corazon Aquino said yesterday it has new evidence that ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos and his family and friends may have plundered up to $10 billion of the nation's wealth.

Former Sen. Jovito Salonga told a news conference that documents found at the presidential palace after Marcos hurriedly abandoned it Feb. 25 link Marcos to purported illegal purchases of property in the US.

Salonga is chairman of a five-member commission Mrs. Aquino created last week to recover "all ill-gotten wealth that the Marcos family and its associates allegedly accumulated and secreted under dummy names during Marcos' 20-year rule.



Asked how much money was involved, Salonga replied,"maybe $5 billion to $10 billion." He did not elaborate.

The estimate was the largest yet. The 1985 national budget of the financially strapped Philippines was $3.3 billion.

The nation's foreign debt is $26 billion and, according to the Marcos government, the average per capita income of the 55.5 million Filipinos last year was $136.

Hiring consultant Arthur Pell gives advice on job hunting to a crowd of 300, yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom.

Consultant offers help to job seekers

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

In order to be competitive in the entry-level job market, job candidates must market themselves as a company markets a new product, Arthur Pell told a crowd of about 300 in the Student Union Ballroom last night.

Pell, who has been a hiring consultant for the past 35 years said, "The day when somebody gets a job and retires from the same job, in later life, is over. Plan to get your first job and take it from there."

Asking people questions about their jobs is the best way to learn about a job and climbing the promotional ladder, he said.

Pell said the best questions to ask are: "What do you do on a day-to-day basis?" and "What do you look for when you hire somebody?"

He mentioned an art major who wanted to be a museum manager. She found, before graduation, that she needed administrative as well as an art background to enter museum management. So she took some business and management courses.

"Now she has a competitive edge over others who desire to get into the same type of work," Pell said.

Networking, or developing connections, is a must, Pell said. He said job hunters should write a note thanking contacts for advice or information, and write the contact's name and background on an index card, along with the date of and purpose of the visit.

"Do not ask contacts if they have a job for you," Pell said. "Ask if they know anybody who has an opening for somebody with your background. That way, your name and your resume will be passed along.

"Think of yourself as a product that has to be marketed and of your resume as a sales promotion tool to make an employer say,'I want to see that person.'

"Evalaute your background and ask, 'If I were out to hire someone, why would I hire me?'" Pell said. "If you know that that job is of a specific nature, then tailor your resume to what the company wants to hear."

Encouragement from Hart

But Rep. Atkins chides SAFA on Gramm-Rudman

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., yesterday took a swipe at President Reagan's 1987 budget request in an impromptu meeting with several University of Massachusetts students lobbying for financial aid here.

"It's as terrible as the last five [budgets]," Hart said during the five-minute talk with members of Students Advocating Financial Aid who spent their second day on Capitol Hill drumming up legislative support for student aid.

David Nelson of SAFA, a former Hart presidential campaign aide, said he "ambushed" Hart in the halls of the Senate building and requested a visit.

The students posed for photos with Hart and thanked him for "leading the battle against Gramm-Rudman-Hollings [deficit reduction law]."

"I only wish I had done better," Hart said. "I think it will take a new administration to really turn things around."

But in an afternoon visit with Rep. Chester Atkins, D-Mass., the students were told that a vote for the deficit-reduction law is not a vote against education, as many legislators have claimed.

Atkins said he voted for the law because the "greatest threat to domestic programs, including education, comes from the deficit.

"I've shed my blood for your causes [education] for the past 14 years ... The deficit is robbing from the future," Atkins said, expressing annoyance that SAFA criticized him for supporting the law.

In an informal meeting often punctuated by laughter later that afternoon, Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Cohasset, said the slashing of 91,000 Pell grants by the enactment of the law was "the little ax," as opposed to Reagan's assault on domestic programs.

Studds said he feared a presidency in which "the people view him [Reagan] with so much affection as a person that they don't listen to what he says."

Studds implored students to continue being vocal.

"To the extent that people believe your generation is asleep, all this [financial aid cuts] will keep happening," he said.

SAFA members also talked with an aide to Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., co-architect of the deficit bill.

Rachel Sotsky, the aide, said Rudman believed "if we don't do something meaningful quickly [about deficit], we're going to have a disaster on our hands."

SAFA is sheduled to meet with Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. this morning.

Pain should be studied more, says academic

By JOHN VINCENT
Collegian Staff

Panetics, a new science measuring the infliction of pain was introduced for the first time by its originator, Dr. Ralph H.G. Siu, who said the academic community should consider making panetics an academic discipline, last night in Memorial Hall Lounge.

Siu told a crowd of about 40 that, "I have found that over the millions of years there has been the persistence of something rotten and very sad, limiting the advance of humankind in its nobler aspects," Siu said. "This has been the unceasing infliction of suffering by men on each other and on all creatures within their reach.

"It is proposed that a new academic discipline be made to study the infliction of suffering and all of its ramifications," Siu said. "This is the needed spark to set us on the path of humanitarianism."

Siu gave examples of the infliction of suffering ranging from Englishmen hunting natives on the island of Tasmania in the nineteenth century to corporate executives who refrain from lowering the toxic level of the wastes generated by their company.

Siu said that after panetics becomes an academic discipline necessary research could be done, and the public could be adequately appraised of the significance of reducing infliction of pain in every aspect of life.

Siu just completed a book on panetics. He is a corporate consultant and worked as the director of the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice.

Dr. Ralph H.G. Siu, an expert on pain says he wants the subject to get more attention.

Students back from trip; lobbied for Soviet Jews

By LISA DiMEO
Collegian Staff

Twenty area students met with senators and congressmen in Washington, D.C., last week to encourage them to further their efforts on behalf of Soviet Jewry.

The two-day event, held Wednesday and Thursday, was organized by the Student Coalition for Soviet Jewry and was attended by more than 700 East Coast college students, including 18 from the University of Massachusetts and two from Mount Holyoke College.

Michelle Richmond, UMass Hillel's Soviet Jewry chairwoman and the trip's campus coordinator, felt the lobby was very successful because "it isn't a Jewish issue but rather is a human rights issue," she said. "It's very one-sided. There really aren't any anti-Soviet Jewry groups around to oppose us."

The three million Jews in the Soviet Union make up the world's third-largest Jewish community but endure widespread persecution due to their religious and cultural beliefs. The Soviet government represses studies of Judaism by keeping Jews from congregating and often punishes some more severely with imprisonment.

The lobby, now in its 10th year, meets annually to discuss the progress of Soviet Jews with senators and congressmen. This year the meeting came shortly after the release of Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky after his 13-year struggle to gain freedom to Israel.

Richmond said she is confident that Shcharansky's release won't cause people to become content and forget about Jews still in the USSR. "There are still people who want them to get out," she said.

The release of Soviet Jews seems to fluctuate with US-Soviet relations, Richmond said. In 1979, she said, 51,320 Jews emigrated as compared with 896 in 1984 and 1140 in 1985. She credits the recent upswing to the Geneva summit.

She said more than 400,000 Jews have applied for exit visas but very few have been granted. "The government doesn't want them there but it won't let them leave either."

Terry Lally, another UMass participant, said he was happy with the efforts of Massachusetts politicians.

"Our representatives were very much in the forefront," he said.

Lally pointed to a recent instance when Sen. John Kerry approached many senators personally and got 85 of them sign a petition for the Soviet Jews. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's recent trip to the Soviet Union was also successful in that he was able to secure the release of 25 Jewish families.

Progressive men's movement regroups

By SARAH BUSH
Collegian Correspondent

Pioneer Valley activists in the progressive "men's movement" say they are having trouble maintaining cohesiveness in a transitive college community.

One of the more visible components of the movement has been Men Against Violence Against Women, which is inactive at this point, though many former members now work through the Sexual Prevention Network in the Everywoman's Center.

Last semester activists submitted a three-point proposal to the University of Massachusetts Office of Student Affairs:

- Funding for research on available services concerning men's issues.
- Developing pilot models for workshops geared to male consciousness-raising.
- Re-establishing a three-credit course called "Men and Masculinity" which was offered for two semesters in 1983.

The Office of Student Affairs sent the proposal to the Office of Human Relations, which then forwarded it to the Rape Task Force. Neither of the latter offices is in a position to offer funding.

"Basically, it has gotten the runaround," says graduate student Steve Botkin.

"It is a delicate issue because it's seen as another special interest group and also because we are typically seen as a privelieged group who should not get funding," he said.

Botkin's involvement in the men's movement includes the Men's Resource Connection, which has basically been running out of his house for the past four years.

He said he helps about two men's groups a year get started as well as providing his callers with information and counseling.

In addition, he helped produce the Valley Men's Newsletter which has not printed an issue since May 1985 due to lack of funds. The newsletter was initially funded out of a Men's Movement conference held two years ago at Hampshire College.

The movement is not just a phenomenon of the "Happy Valley."

The National Organization for Changing Men plans annual conferences and publishes a newsletter called "Brother." On March 15-16, a regional conference is being held in New Haven Further information is available at the Everywoman's Center.

Advisor seeks to help men 'reclaim their humanness'

Social dehumanization is at the heart of violence against women, according to the Residential Education Men's Center advisor.

"Men are trained to victimize women," Billy Yalowitz said in a recent interview.

In light of this, Yalowitz is offering a colloqium this semester called "Leadership and Men's Issues." He said he hopes this will allow men to be models to other men as non-oppressive leaders.

"It takes a great courage for a man to be visibly caring and life-affirming, which includes interrupting oppression," he explained.

Yalowitz said he feels the progressive men's movement must address society's systematic dehumanization of men and the ending of sexism. Yalowitz defines sexism as "men acting out the mistreatment that they receive and directing that onto women."

Some men in the movement, however, see the the issue differently and blame women for misunderstanding their needs. Yalowitz attributes this to guilt and defensiveness in response to the anger that women express about this sexist society.

He also said the creation of the men's movement came about due to the awakening of the women's movement.

"It has created the environment where this work had to happen for us. A lot of the models for consciousness-raising that I use are directly taken from the feminist movement," he said.

Right now there is a non-functioning men's center in Hamlin House in Northeast. It has been locked up for a year with $400 worth of literature lying idle.

The center initially functioned out of Brett House in Central -- complete with a coordinator- but was then moved to Hamlin because it is an all-male dormitory. Since then the center has had trouble finding support.

Yalowitz said he feels this disinterest is the result of a lack of education and understanding about its purpose. He said he hopes to revive the center by training leaders to do programming, lead some men's groups and create a climate where men start to need this information.

"We [men] sort of get addicted to the comforts we get offered through sexism; it is like you're given a lot of money to buy something that your spirit and heart can't use although it might make you more comfortable in a certain way," he said.

"I am looking to develop a complete program to end violence against women through men telling their stories and reclaiming their humanness," Yalowitz said.

fidentially and in the privacy of their own home," he said.

University Health Services and program directors have also set up a series of six workshops for gay men called "Sexuality and Health."

"The goals of the workshop will be to understand the modes of transmission of the HTLV-III virus [identified as the probable cause of AIDS], to understand the anxiety about AIDS, to learn new communication stratagies and to overcome fears of each other," said Ron Mazur, the coordinator of the peer sexuality education program at Health Services.

The workshops will examine other aspects of relationships, how people met their partners, their emotional ties within a relationship, what is expected from a relationship, and how to have sexual intercourse while minimizing the risk of AIDS.

"Men are raised and taught not to be demonstrative. We want to teach men that sex isn't just a physical act but an emotional one too," Ide said.

"[Gay] men are constantly aware in a relationship that this person [their partner] could kill you." he said. "We want to break the barrier and show them all these things you can do where this problem won't come into a relationship."

The first four workshops are loosely planned and the other two will be organized to fit the needs of the group.

"Getting information out is the best defense against oppression," Ide said.

The series will begin this week and will be held at 7:00 p.m. Thursday evenings in room 302 of the University Health Center and participants are asked to attend all six. Men interested in attending must preregister at the University Health Services or in the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance office.

Anyone interested in information about the disease can call the hotline, 545-1540, and ask to hear the AIDS tape, number 0669. It is question-and-answer format and lasts about five minutes.

SGA hopefuls debate fees, student rights

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

Candidates for student government president and student trustee last night debated a variety of campus issues including the control of student activities money, student rights, and the credibility of the Student Government Association.

The debate, sponsored by the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee, brought toether five of the six candidates for student representitive to the Board of Trustees and the four candidates vying for the SGA presidency.

The faceoff was attended by about a hundred people who cheered their favorite candidates -- and sometimes hissed -- as the hopefuls answered questions from the audience and a panel from WMUA and the Collegian.

Trustee candidate Denise Forbes accused Student Activities Director Randy Donant of being a "two faced fraud" who was throwing the SGA budget into disarray by increasing the budget of his office while refusing to allow the senate to increase the student activities fee.

The Student Activities Trust Fund, ostensibly controlled by the senate, funds registered student organizations and has a deficit of $120,000, Donant estimated.

Trustee candidate Daniel J. Valianti said a moderate philosophy was his strength. He said he had gone door-to-door in every dorm on campus to hear from students, and that a failure of the current student goverment to educate students on campus issues should be corrected.

John Galt Sparks, chairman of the SGA Rent and Fees Committee and trustee candidate, stressed his ability to get results. He pointed to his committee's ability to eliminate the $200 a year engineering fee as an example of his effectiveness.

Incumbent trustee Dani Burgess said he had "broad based experience" and said he has a good chance of getting on the Executive Council of the state Board of Regents. He said that would allow him a much more powerful voice for students statewide.

Burgess' running mate, presidential candidate M. Lynne Murphy pointed out her experience as assistant to the current SGA co-presidents and her work in various campus activities.

"I have been known to be a vocal senator because I have the ability to make the desires of my constituents known," she said. She attacked the zero-funding of advocacy RSOs, saying there was too little diversity on the SGA Budgets Committee, which eliminated funding for the groups in its proposed budget for the next fiscal year.

Presidential candidate Bill Bennett said, "we need to bring the students together.'

He said there was too much animosity in the current student senate, adding, "we don't need vocal senators; we need senators that are there for the students, to present the student views."

The elections for student trustee and SGA president will take place March 10 and 11.

Presidential candidate Ted Capodilupo seemed unprepared and stumbled through many of his answers.

Running on the "Voodoo" ticket are Hank Pierce for trustee and Jason Talerman for president. The two candidates presented a number of bizarre proposals. Their statements constituted a standup comedy routine which brought roars of laughter.

The SGA grants presidential candidates $185 and $125 to trustee hopefuls for campaign expenses.

Nightclub may reopen soon

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

The owner of Justin Ryan's, Robert Ross, said last week that the Northampton Road nightclub will reopen, although he could not say when.

But in a recent story in the Daily Hampshire Gazette, Ross's brother Michael, who had managed the bar, said the owner is seeking new financing in order to reopen after spring break.

"We have our reasons [for closing]," Robert Ross told the Collegian. "It has something to do with the industry." He declined further comment.

Justin Ryan's was last open Feb. 22, according to an employee.

Griff Dow, a UMass senior majoring in communications, went to Justin Ryan's "because it was big. JR's was a good place to go if you wanted to dance. But as soon as you got there, you were stuck. You couldn't go anywhere else.

"It's not like going uptown where you've got Time Out, Barsie's, Delano's and The Pub, which are all within walking distance from campus," Dow said.

"The location's always been a dud,"said Dan Carlson,manager of Barsie's."They've had four or five things there and they've all gone under. It's hard to get to and there's no real parking."

In 1973, the Steak-Out went into business at 351 Northampton Road. The address was taken over by Branagan's in 1981. Joey Dee's moved into the location in 1982, giving way to Justin Ryan's in 1984.

"The location's a little off the beaten path,"said Joseph DiNatale,former proprietor of Joey Dee's. "And the kids around here are tough to do business with. They've got tunnel vision: All they see is The Pub, Barsie's, and Time Out. Unless you give the booze away, they won't go down there."

John Allen, general manager of Pearl Street, said skyrocketing liquor liability insurance rates are a burden to barkeepers.

Michael Kane, manager of Changes on Belchertown Road, said that his business was not affected by the rise in liquor liability insurance rates as much as other bars, because Changes and Hunan Garden, a Chinese restaurant at the same address, are one business.

"When you're 50 percent food and 50 percent liquor, it's a lot easier to obtain liability insurance than if you're just serving liquor," he said. Changes was considered to be Justin Ryan's' main competition.

The University of Massachusetts was "dry" last semester because it could not obtain insurance covering alcohol-related accidents. The University is now insured by the Joint Underwriters Association, a pool of private insurers set up by the state last November after high settlements awarded in alcohol-related lawsuits boosted liabilty insurance rates.

Allen did not know how the closing of Justin Ryan's will affect his business.

"I can't imagine what will happen.You never know what will happen in this business until it happens," he said.

'JR's had a different student crowd than we do,"he said."Our students come in specifically for the music. JR's had much more of a neighborhood-bar feel to it."

"I don't think it's going to have any effect on our business," Kane said. "There are lines here every Thursday, Friday and Saturday night. We can't fit any more people in as it is."

Filipino transition bypassed NPA

I feel obliged to address some of the issues raised by Timothy Harris' column about the Philippines in Monday's Collegian.

The most disturbing aspect of Harris' column is his implication that President Aquino is no more than a continuation of the Marcos regime. Clearly this is not the case. Aquino won the election by a wide margin and enjoys the support of almost every sector of Philippine society. The shooting is not still going on under President Aquino, in fact she has begun releasing Marcos' political prisoners.

Harris also states that President Aquino is powerless to redistribute the wealth of the country because of the corrupt military and private security forces. He seems to ignore the fact that the Military Reform Movement simultaneously expelled Marcos' cronies and installed Aquino as the president. As for private security forces, even the most hard core private army would have no chance defending a plantation against a well equipped national army.

Harris seems to base his argument in favor of the NPA entirely on the fact that 5 million people support the NPA. He fails to mention that the Philippines has a population of over 50 million, and that the NPA undoubtedly lost many of its supporters when the people saw that a peaceful transfer of power was possible.

The people of the Philippines have removed a corrupt dictator and installed a democratic govenment, and they have done it with minimal bloodshed and civil strife. The people of the Philippines deserve our admiration and support as they enter a new phase in their history.

Hank Thayer
Amherst

Communism hardly a solution

As a Filipino who spent last intercession in the Philippines, there is only one thing that angers me more than shortsighted military men like Caspar Weinberger, who ignore the obvious role of government in defending human interests. The only thing worse is knee-jerk left wing radicals who prescribe change because it seems almost clinically expedient. I am addressing Timothy Harris's column about the US role in the Philippines. First of all, it takes the same paternalistic viewpoint that our administration takes in determining how to run other countries. Such an uninformed outsider viewpoint cannot hope to be accurate, much less solve anything. Secondly, he has his facts quite wrong concerning the U.S. role in the Philippines after the Spanish-American war. The Spanish had already done an excellent job of Catholicizing the people; the US wanted to install its form of government there, and after much bloodshed, it succeeded. Thirdly, whoever decided that the objective of the government should be to redistribute wealth (vis a vis the NPA)?

The revolution in the Philippines last month was an excellent role model for the overthrow of a bad dictatorship. The battle was won not by any military means, but by hundreds of thousands of protestors in the streets, and millions more who provided moral support. It was won by the jounalists who literally risked their lives to provide free press. It was won from the inside by the people and only facilitated to a degree by the U.S.

The new Filipino government must be recognized for what it is; a politically moderate group whose chief goal is to reintegrate a factionalized, corrupted country by socio-economic and political reform. Aquino has already proven to be a strong leader, forgiving and cooperative with diversified interests, while remaining adamant about her moral beliefs. She is very different from Marcos and does not deserve to be examined by outsiders in the same light. She has immense popular support there and I should hope that she should receive the same here.

Now I read Tim Harris's suggestion that the NPA is the only solution to the poverty and economic stratification in the Philippines. I suggest he and others do some homework and consider the logistics of completely restructuring a country's governmental infrastructure anew and examine the possible costs (in money, time, and blood). While studying, examine the record of the NPA. They began as an anti-Marcos vigilante group which gathered power by enforcing law without trials in the countryside in response to the corruption which prevailed under Marcos. They have gained a reputation there as a disorganized, inconsistent, and very violent group. Since the expulsion of Marcos, they have lost quite a bit of power.

Activism counters hunger

Patricia Diggins

Hunger is everywhere in the world, including the United States. However, for the majority of us, hunger is a very abstract issue. We find it difficult to see any way we can affect such a huge problem. For most of history, wiping out hunger was thought to be the ultimate but unachievable humanitarian goal. Recently, the thinking has been changing. Why can't hunger be stopped? In the Third World this is a monumental task for many reasons, but what about in the United States?

Why are people hungry in the United States, the land of plenty? Does it seem like an impossible goal to feed every person in this country? There aren't any shortages in the grocery stores this year, in fact I can't ever remember seeing a shortage of food. The problem, of course, is you need money to get that food. Basically, the hungry either have to be given money or food. Whose responsibility is it to provide this? The U.S. government should certainly have a role in providing for the basic needs of the citizens that support it. However, as much as the government falls short in this duty by favoring the military over human services, hunger is not mainly a budgetary problem It is a problem in the structure of U.S. society.

We live in a patchwork society. Every time a problem comes up that the government can't ignore they throw money and a law at it and expect everything to be better. Hunger can't be fixed successfully this way. Welfare and food stamps are highly criticized and not very effective programs for alleviating poverty. We need a solid system for providing the poor in this country with a source of inexpensive, healthy food. The current system of food banks and soup kitchens is a start. This network should be increased and better financed. Other options should also be developed like community gardens and canning centers. Currently, these are charitable ventures supported by churches and other organizations, but the power and money of government is needed. The growing grassroots hunger movement is the greatest hope of pushing these hunger program options and encouraging the government to get involved.

The hunger movement in this country is mainly concentrating raising money to feed the hungry. This in the long run is only a temporary solution. The hunger movement should capitalize on recent outpouring of money and support, brought about by events like Live-Aid, to start to change the system. A political voice for the hungry is very important if any meaningful changes are to occur. We have to help Ronald Reagan realize that there are people going hungry in his country. In addition to lobbying the government, the private sector should be looked to as a source of support for hunger programs.

The hungry in this country aren't lazy or criminals as some would have them portrayed. They are mainly underemployed, disabled, elderly or children. Anyone who argues the system works has never felt hunger beyond missing a meal. It should be a goal of this country to achieve a voluntary redistribution of wealth sufficient to take care of basic human needs.

Today, Thursday and Saturday, the UMass chapter of MassPIRG will be asking customers at the Super Stop and Shop in Hadley to help the hungry in Western Massachusetts by donating a food purchase. This is a convenient way for everyone to make a contribution to solving the hunger problem. Anyone interested in getting more involved in the issue can contact MassPIRG in room 423 of the Student Union Building, The UMass Hunger Task Force, or Students against Hunger (MassAid) in room 322 of the SUB. All are student groups actively fighting hunger and all are in the Student Union. Help is needed if we are to finally achieve the impossible.

Patricia Diggins is a UMass student.

Letter was insulting, unfair

Mary Flanders

I would like to comment on Jeffrey Clark's letter which appeared on Thursday (Feb. 27). I was offended by it. Clark does exactly what he is condemning. He warns respect for his beliefs from those who do not agree with him, but he does not give them respect. Shouldn't we do unto others as we would have them do unto us? Instead of saying to people that they should be Christian and why, he says if they are not "they are just plain wrong." Insulting someone will not change their minds.

Clark also spoke of Rusty Denton. He praises him for being someone who is not afraid to state the truth. Who is to say Denton knows the truth? He writes about what he perceives to be the truth, just as Clark and I do. The mistake is not allowing another opinion or "truth." Without taking into account all sides, how can we come to a true understanding of anything? I do agree with Clark in his statement that people should not make personal attacks against Denton because of his "commitment to Christ." I have many problems with Denton's columns, but they are political and have nothing to do with his faith.

Clark said we "should look to ourselves and check our own faith." Who is he to say we have not done this? Just because someone's faith is not the same as Clark's, does it mean they are wrong? Yes, it may be possible that Denton's faith is the true faith. It might not be. Who is to judge? Clark? I think not. He is insulting those who do not believe the same as he does. Don't they have a right to their beliefs? Wouldn't God and the Bible say to love thy neighbor even if they are different?

I was slightly amused when Clark wrote that he could "attempt to explain what Christianity is according to the Bible." If he wanted to know what Christainity is, I think that we would consult someone with more knowledge, such as a priest from the Newman Center or a Christian minister, not a UMass student.

I took the greatest offense when Clark made the generalization about anti-Christian leftists. Is he saying that all leftists are anit-Christian or all anti-Christians are leftists? Is this a Christian thing to say? Who is to say that others should seek out what they believe and repent to God? I think it is up to God to decide who should repent.

In his last statement, Clark commented that the paper may have the guts to print a response that does not satisfy the politically left and anti-Christian views that prevails on the editorial page. I guess my letter will doubly not be printed. I am politically very leftist and religiously very Catholic. I wonder where I would fit in Clark's classifications of people?

To Clark and others who believe as Clark does, I say that I find your sterotypes of Christians, anti-Christians, and leftists insulting and Calvinistic. I suggest a social awareness workshop from Health Services to aid you in accepting people who are different. Isn't that the same respect that you are arguing over from them?

Mary Flanders is a UMass student.

Questions and calendars

Stephen Erickson

The time we spend at the University is a time of questioning. Here are a few things I've been wondering about;

Why are professors such poor dressers? I realize many of them are leftists, but do they have to all dress like members of the Soviet Politburo? I don't pay good money to see the same pair of plaid trousers on my professors every week.

What is a "low salt test area?" Just after the 202 intersection on Rt. 9 there is a sign that says "low salt test area." Does that mean the town of Belchertown sits back and counts the number of vehicles that crash for lack of traction. Perhaps the neighborhood is on a low sodium diet.

Why are people always sleeping on the couches of the Campus Center. Don't they have homes?

Why do all those ducks hang out at the Campus Pond? Why don't their little webbed feet get frozen into the ice while they are sleeping? Then the DCs could serve freshly frozen roast duck. Yum.

Why does the University Store sell calenders with half-naked men on them but no women? The UMass Republican Club is thinking about making its own calendar as a fundraiser -- "Men of the UMass Republican Club." Pete Dow has volunteered to be Mr. September.

Who was President Reagan throwing that snow ball at on the cover of last week's Globe? Hopefully Sam Donaldson took it in the face.

Why do pacifist-hippie types walk around in military fatigues? I wear fatigues, but I'd enjoy crushing Soviet Imperialism.

Why is there steam pouring out of the ground all over campus? Most universities have ivory covered halls and sprawling lawns. We have geysers.

Why is Goodell Library always so hot? Is it really a fat farm? I for one don't need to lose any weight.

Is President Reagan's National Security Advisor's name really Poindexter? A National Security Advisers name should be tough -- like "Rocky," "Spike," "Guido," or Cap "the Knife" Weinberger. Poindexter sounds like someone who should be sharpening pencils somewhere.

Who actually manufactures all of those "no-name" bargain products sold in the super markets? What are they trying to hide anyway? They are probably rich multi-nationals who exploit helpless people for fun and profit.

Why do guerillas in Beirut wear green camoflage uniforms when there's hardly a living plant within miles? Why don't they dress up like burned-out buildings instead?

How is Red Sox player Wade Boggs ever going to get by on a salary of $1.35 million? The poor guy wanted $1.85 million. Oh well, to make ends meet perhaps he can find a part time job delivering pizzas or something.

Why is Libyan dictator Moammar Khadaffy only a Colonel? With the unlimited power he wields he could proclaim himself general, Field Marshal, or Captain Kangaroo if he so chose. I guess humility forbids. What a guy.

How do I come up with things to write about every week? Sometimes I don't and just take up space asking stupid questions instead.

Chair responds to policy editorial

I wish to address the "Fiscal questions" raised in the Collegian policy editorial of Monday, March 3. The priority of the SGA Budgets Committee is to fund student activities and student services. Our priority is not to fund small partisan political groups to which the vast majority of students do not belong. It is also not the priority of the Budgets Committee to fund a magazine that is the product of an academic course, that has most of its copies shipped to sources outside the University, and has not been printed since 1984. We welcome the viewpoint of the Collegian editorial board, but we wish that further input be accompanied by constructive alternatives.

WMUA D.J. plans to produce album

By MOIRA SMITH
Collegian Correspondent

"Awhh yahh this is Mix Master Mike chillin' out in the place to be, doin' the right thing, hopin' you'll give me a call at 545-FM91..."

Every Saturday night between seven and ten o'clock if you turn your radio to 91.1 on the FM dial you can hear Mix Master Mike cuttin' it up for UMass in the studios of WMUA.

Not everyone enjoys the somewhat celebrity status of Mix Master Mike. And the notoriety comes from the style and substance of this disc jockey performances that he does weekly on campus for WMUA and at parties and competitions throughout the year.

As a senior in high school Mike became interested in becoming a DJ after attending a party at UMass. "I saw this guy command an audience of 2000 people with the records he played. He'd switch the record and they'd scream. He'd say 'put your hands in the air' and 2000 people put their hands in the air. I was in awe. But when I walked up to the DJ, he was just an everyday person. He looked just like me. And I said why can't do this?"

He taught himself the techniques he uses. "When I was first starting I used to practice one song for hours and people would yell 'shut that garbage off!' But that's what it took, constant practice."

When Mike came to UMass he joined the Black Mass Communications Project within WMUA. A friend jokingly tossed out the name Mix Master. "People started picking up on it. I mean, Mike Oglesby just isn't hitting it as the DJ name. So when it came to my show, I decided to use Mix Master and it stuck. I hate to say it, but most people know me by my DJ name."

He was given a slot on Thursday nights that he parlayed into one of the most listened to slots on WMUA. His new slot on Saturday nights is well on its way to the same renown. For a year Mike and sophomore Ron Furr is a significant creative influence. "Ron is best known for his scratching techniques. Although his style is different from mine, I turn to him for advice. If it doesn't sound good, he'll tell me. He pushes me. He keeps me going."

"My sound has varied throughout the three years I have been here. I play R&B, rap, dancey beat music, discoey stuff, sometimes top 40. I want to attract everyone at UMass. I'm not going for one particular group.

"What makes it fun is the response I get from people when I'm doing a radio show or party. The people are what keep you going. It's not that it swells your head, it makes you strive to do better. If people are enjoying what I do, then I enjoy it."

Mike and Ron Furr are teaming up to make a rap record. They've written the songs and have the copywrite. "We have it on tape. We're distributing it now. We have some people who are very interested.

A lot of people think I have a big head because I'm a DJ. I can't look at it that way. I do other things in my life besides that. And that's what keeps it balanced. I'm just like anyone else, really." He cocks his head and smiles.

Color Guards compete Sunday

By DAVID HAUTANEN
Collegian Correspondent

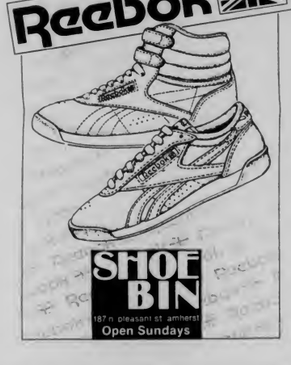
The Minuteman Marching Band and Spitfire Color Guard are sponsoring a National Judges Association Indoor Color Guard Competition on Sunday March 9 at 1:30 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage at UMass.

Spitfire Color Guard, a competition guard, is sponsored by the Minuteman Marching Band and the Department of Music and Dance. Spitfire is the reigning 1985 Chapter 4 and All Chapter Class "AA" Champions. As an indoor color guard, Spitfire performs on gym floors to taped music using various types of equipment to express the music. The equipment must include flags, rifles and sometimes, sabres and other more unique equipment such as backdrops, streamers, hula hoops and capes. An indoor color guard show is much like a football half-time show without the marching band.

There will be color guards from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Long Island, New Hampshire, New York, and New Jersey. These other competing guards will be presenting thematic shows based on the 1950s Camelot, a Spanish Conga, and other various themes. Refreshments will be available, including Hot Dogs, Subs and Soda. The doors will open at 1 p.m. and the show will start at 1:30 p.m. There will be a small charge at the door for students and adults.

Costello visit: conflicting reports

In a recent article, the Collegian told you to see the Pogues at Pearl Street tonight if you wanted to see Elvis Costello.



The latest information we get now from John Allen of the Pearl Street establishment, however, is that of conflicting reports of Costello's appearance. Allen explains that one of his New York contacts assures him that Costello will come.

Another report is that the producer of the Pogues will not even be in the country tonight, but in England.

You should have a great time if Costello is there or not. The Pogues' sound is a mixture of traditional Irish folk and punk. Go, have a wild Irish night, and see if Elvis graces the stage.

Jingles and more

By JENNIFER ROOKS
Collegian Correspondent

David Buskin and Robin Batteau, singers and songwriters of pop and folk-rock music, brought Buckley Auditorium to life last Friday night with an array of humor and music as the second performance in the Five College Arts Festival.

Everyone has heard of Buskin and Batteau, whether you know it or not. How often have you been sitting in your dorm room, watching your favorite soap and been interrupted with the reminder that you're tuned to "NBC, Let's All Be There," or about the "Unsinkable Taste of Cheerios?" Writing advertisement jingles is the duo's "real-paying job."

Buskin and Batteau have been in the music business for 15 years. They began their careers in the late 1970s as members of the pop rock group Pierce Arrow. When the band broke up, the two stayed together and are now entertaining audiences with a performance that keep people tapping their feet, rolling in the isles, and talking about it for days.

The talented duo performed a variety of songs which played on both the serious and humorous side of everyday life. With a back-up percussion and acoustic string bass, Busking shifted between the guitar and the piano. Batteau, usually on the guitar, incorporated the violin into the performance, adding an original and special touch to many of the songs.

They did some love songs, added a few about personal experiences and ambitions, sprinkled the whole thing with humorous ballads about Annette Funicello and mythical music inspired by "Death in Venice" with a sophisticated dry-and-light humor. Batteau's sensitive tune "The Boy With the Violin," saving the best for last, was an exceptional and unique song which received its due extra applause. This topped off the performance which the audience would not let end without an encore.

IM basketball playoffs start

By R.P. HEYWOOD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Intramural basketball playoffs are off to a flying start.

Starting last night in Boyden Gym, four divisions began tournament action to crown a champion before spring break.

In the men's division, 66 teams are in the title chase, led by defending champion The Supreme Team.

The women's division involves 12 teams with defending champion Buzzcats the favorite in a tightly-contested race.

The co-recreational league involves 10 teams with the always-tough Low Budget squad looking to defend its title and stay undefeated.

The Graduate-Staff league will see eight teams vie for the trophy,led by GFW II, the top seed. The defending champion, Sports Management, is also back and they will be looking to climb to the championship from the second seeded spot.

The finals will be next Thursday with the women at 6 p.m., the men and grad-staff games at 7 p.m. and the co-rec going off at 8 p.m. The games are in Boyden Gym.

The IM department is also starting wrestling, with 80-90 grapplers competing in 17 weight classes. That started last night.

Football Managers: Want to play a role on the University of Massachusetts football team?

Minuteman head coach Jim Reid is looking for managers. Duties would start with spring football this semester and continue with the fall season in September.

"This is a good chance for a student to get involved with the team and have a lot of fun at the same time," said Reid. "This is a great way to learn about how a team runs."

Interested parties should stop by the football office on the second floor of Boyden across from the wrestling room just off the lobby.

Or call assistant coach Mike Dunbar at 545-2453 for more information.

University of Massachusetts head basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen has mixed emotions about the past season.

"The team didn't realize what it took to win; they do now. That's why we'll be better." -Ron Gerlufsen

UM reflects back, while looking ahead

By PETER ABRAHAM

It was a harsh lesson, but one well learned.

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team entered the 1985-86 season brimming with confidence and justly so, for it possessed the most pure physical talent of any Minuteman team in recent years.

The young team (one senior, two juniors, three sophomores, and six freshmen) wasn't used to losing. They came from highly-successful high school programs that entered post-season tournaments as a habit, not an exception.

This summer however, the 11 players that return to the team next season will dwell on their 9-19 record, a winning percentage of .321. It was a bad season by anyone's standards. Especially theirs.

"Sure, I'm disappointed," said sophomore guard Lorenzo Sutton after UMass was knocked out of the Atlantic 10 tournament by Rutgers, 52-47 last week. "I thought we'd have a better season, we had so much ability, we just didn't put it together. It really bothers me that we didn't do better"

The key to the season, both Gerlufsen and the players feel, was that the younger players didn't realize what it took to play college basketball on the Division 1 level.

In high school, they were the best players on the court. Nobody else was taller, quicker or could jump as higher. After great high school careers, the youthful Minutemen thought that sucess was translate easily into the college game.

In college however, every player can jump, they're all big and usually just as quick. Individual one-on-one play doesn't work in Division 1 like it did in high school.

"I've just finished meeting with the players individually, and they've all told me that they didn't realize what it took to play at the level we play on," said Gerlufsen. "I think for that reason, we'll be a better team in the future. We learned our lesson."

In 1985-86, the season started with an overflowing crowd watching UMass beat Merrimack at the newly-renovated Cage. Three straight losses to New Hampshire, Boston University and Connecticut put a sudden damper on things. UMass went up-and-down after that, winning three in-a-row at one point, but losing their last five along with losing streak of three and four games earlier in the season.

UMass didn't play well offensively during the season. Sutton was the only player to average in double figures (17.8) while the frontcourt searched for consistency.

Junior point guard Carl Smith, after being pictured in Sports Illustrated at the start of the season, had a great year with 6.8 assists-per-game, but scored only 7.1 ppg, below his first two seasons and far less then what was expected.

"I think Carl was too busy worrying about everybody else and not playing his own game," said the coach. "I didn't have to tell him to stop doing something much during the year and I should have to tell a point guard that he should slow down or stop taking bad shots. He was conservative, he didn't play with the abandon I'd like to see."

Gerlufsen also said that the UMass offense will undergo renovations, especially against the zone.

"We need to work on our offense, no doubt about that," Gerlufsen. "Our inside players weren't as aggressive as I thought they would be. One of our priorities is for the post players like John Milum, Duane Chase and Sean Mosby to get some added muscle though our weights program. We have them some time off now, but I've heard that Duane and Sean are already lifting on their own, I like seeing that kind of hard work. We'll also move our fowards around more against the zone and work harder for an inside shot."

On the bright side, the important things for unhappy UMass fans to remember are:

• UMass was 15-63 in the Eastern 8/Atlantic 10 between 1976-83. Between 1979-81, UMass was 0-33. Since 1983-84, when Gerlufsen took over, UMass is 19-33, not good, but much improved. UMass was fourth in the league last season and finished seventh this season despite preseason predictions for the cellar.

• UMass returns all but one of its first nine players next season, including all five starters. No other Atlantic 10 team will do that. UMass has also proven they can compete against any team in the league. 6-12, believe it or not, is a decent record for a team that started three freshmen, a sophomore and a junior with three freshmen coming off the bench.

• Gerlufsen will finally have a team made up of just his own players. The rebuilding of the Ray Wilson/Tom McLaughlin era is done and the year for the freshman to grow has just passed. Next season, the corner should be officially turned.

Next season, a .500 record is a reasonable goal for UMass. It seems to be one the media, the coaching staff, the players and the fans have set. 1986-87 will be a critical season for UMass.

"There will be pressure, but I think we have the team to handle it," said Gerlufsen. "I can honestly say I can't wait for next year." We're ready to make a move."

Questions for next season? There are many.

As far as the players go, the freshmen have much to prove. Chase, a 6-5 foward, has to maintain his intensity. Mosby, a 6-8 center, came in as a project and contributed. He has to strengthen up and work on refining his game. Mike Mundy, a quick guard, adds much to UMass, but needs to control his play and develop a better team-oriented attitude. Milum, a 6-10 freshman center, also needs bulk and a better attitude toward team play. Fitzhugh Tarry was a class-act all the way and can also contribute. Sophomore Wilbert Hicks has to prove he can help. Sutton should just maintain his level while Smith has to shake off his lethargy and play like he can.

But overall, UMass is a team with unlimited potential that will please its fans next season. A veteran group returns from this season's sometime disaster. There is hope.

"We learned what it's all about this season," said Gerlufsen. "Hopefully, the lessons will pay off."

Atlantic 10 awaits NCAA tourney bids

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Of the three Atlantic 10 teams that deserve to be in the NCAA tournament, only one knows it will make it for sure.

St. Joseph's University, by virtue of its 72-64 victory over West Virginia on Monday night at the Meadowlands in the finals of the A-10 tournament, will receive the automatic league bid.

West Virginia, at 22-10, and Temple, at 24-5, also both have proven they are NCAA caliber teams.

However, it is likely that only one of those teams will be awarded a highly-coveted bid. West Virginia, despite advancing to the tourney finals and posting two victories over St. Joe's in the regular season as well as beating Temple, Pittsburgh and Auburn in the pre-season NIT, is endangered after losing in the league plus having 10 losses.

Temple, losers to WVU in the conference semifinals, has victories over Villanova, Wake Forest, LaSalle and a win in the Pizza Hut Wichita State shootout. The Owls lost only to UCLA and St. Joe's and West Virginia twice each. In their favor, coach Don Chaney is much-respected and Temple's decent showing against Georgetown in the NCAA's last season will help.

"I think all three teams deserve to be in the NCAA's, and that's spoken as a fan, not because I'm with the league," said A-10 acting commissioner Ron Bertovich. "As a league official, it would also be a big step for the conference."

The A-10, either in its present form or as the old Eastern Eight, has never had three teams in the NCAA tournament. To establish themselves firmly as the second-best league in the East outside of the Big East, it's almost a given that all three teams make the NCAA's.

The St. Joe's-West Virginia game on ESPN on Monday night was a definite boost for the conference. For the first time in some years, two league teams faced each other on national televison; but more importantly they played a good game.

Analyst Dick Vitale was almost too good to the conference, liberally singing the praises of the teams and coaches. WVU's Holman Harley provided several outstanding individual moves while the Hawks' Maurice Martin and and Rodney Blake were impressive.

While a full schedule of games on national TV seems a long way off, ESPN will certainly take a good look at televising the conference next season, especially in arenas like WVU's Coliseum, the Rutgers Athletic Center and the Palestra in Philadelphia, all legitimate big-league buildings. The fan support should also materialize and the price would be reasonable, seeing the league desperately needs the exposure. Monday just may have been a turning point for the conference.

With 96 percent of the vote in, incumbent Dani Burgess seems to have won the Student Goverment Association election for student trustee, but there will have to be a runoff election to settle the race for SGA president.

Lynne Murphy, Burgess' running mate had a one-vote lead over the second-place opponent Bill Bennett with more than 30 absentee votes yet to be counted.

With 15 percent of undergraduate students casting ballots, Murphy edged past Bennett, 1,009 vote to 1,008. Joel Rabinowitz of the SGA governmental affairs committee said the committee will ask the undergraduate senate to call for a run-off election between Murphy and Bennett. "It is too close to call. There has been no clear mandate by the students," he said.

"Oh my God, it's so close," Murphy said last night when more than 100 absentee votes remained to be counted. "I'm still hoping I'll win with the absentee votes. I am psyched and confident I'll be ahead when all the votes are counted," she said.

Burgess, who had more than a 300-vote lead over John Galt Sparks, declared victory at 11 p.m. last night. "I am terrifically excited the students at UMass have priorities similar to my own."

Celeste Friend, a supporter of Murphy said she blamed the narrow margin on the "Voodoo" campaign of Jason Talerman. "If Talerman hadn't run, it would have been a landslide for Lynne [Murphy]," Friend said.

Murphy said, "I know of some people who would have voted progressive [Murphy] if not for Talerman."

Censure motions proliferating

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

Charges and countercharges are on the agenda for tonight's meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate as it prepares to hear at least five motions to censure four members of the Student Government Association.

Brian Darling, a senator from Southwest, is the target of two motions to censure as a result of his conviction on misconduct charges brought before the student judiciary by SGA Attorney General Scot McCracken.

"I am not trying to kick them off the senate. This is just a way to say . . . We do not endorse your actions."
-Bob Griffin
Greek area senator

A censure by the senate is an official reprimand which may include suspension of voting privileges.

Darling has answered with a motion to censure McCracken, claiming the charges were "harassment" by McCracken. Meanwhile, Bob Griffin, a senator from the Greek area, has filed to have the senate censure Darling as well as Sylvan senator Tony Rudy. In response, Sylvan senator Lynne McCabe has filed to have Griffin censured.

The controversy began when Darling was found guilty by a student tribunal of violating SGA bylaws. Darling was seen on December 10 throwing away table tents placed in Hampshire Dining Commons by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, which was rallying opposition to a referendum on whether to abolish MassPIRG's funding method. Darling's group, Students for Participatory Democracy, initiated the referendum.

Because of the conviction, McCracken said he will ask the senate speaker, John Ruddock, to move that the senate censure Darling.

Darling said the bylaws under which he was convicted cover only candidates for SGA offices, not referendum campaigns. He said McCracken had earlier tried to use the charges to force him to give up his post as co-chair of the senate's Governmental Affairs Committee.

Griffin said he filed the motions against Darling and Rudy because of what he called their "unacceptable behavior." He said, "I'm not trying to kick them off the senate. This is just a a way to say ... we do not endorse your actions."

McCabe said she filed a motion against Griffin because she felt his motion was vindictive and that Darling was wrongly convicted.

McCabe said her motion charges Griffin with improper behavior while he was running for Greek Area President last semester. Griffin denied the charge.

"[Griffin's motion] is an insult to the senate ," McCabe said. "If they're going to start bringing up charges on things that aren't serious, they should get a dose of their own medicine."

Researchers: Many women wrongly think they're fat

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Staff

Many women label themselves overweight, but they often are the only ones who perceive themselves as such, health experts say.

In a recent national survey, college men and women were showed sketches of bodies ranging from fat to thin and asked to pick out what their bodies looked like, what they wanted them to look like, and what they thought the opposite sex found attractive.

The study found that most women felt they were too fat, and that their ideal attainable figures were still too fat. What the men actually found attractive was something heavier than the women thought, the study reported.

The results, recounted in the February issue of University Health Services' Health Watch, reflect a general media emphasis on thinness.

"Society is pushing women into body sizes that are too small," said Health Services nutritionist Robin Levine. "Consequently, tney are not feeling well about the other half of [their] lives," being too concerned with the physical aspect of their lives.

If women are asked what they do not like about their bodies their first complaint is "weight," whether it is over or under, said UMass psychology Professor Morton Harmatz.

Harmatz said many women have distorted views of their bodies and do not realize that models in advertisements are usually underweight.

For example, studies show, Playboy magazine has used thinner and thinner women over the years for its nude centerfolds.

Women do not see models as too thin and themselves as normal weight, he said. Instead, they often perceive underweight models as normal weight, and themselves as overweight; these women have the most damaged self-images, he said.

Underweight men generally also have poor self-images, Harmatz said -- while women tend to perceive themselves as heavier than they actually are, men often think they are lighter.

Levine said there is a belief that if a woman loses weight she will be everything that she desires – popular, witty, and perfect. "There is too much expectation with a diet and weight loss," she said.

Most vulnerable to this are adolescent and college-age women, said Mary Aubrey of the Everywoman's Center at UMass. Women in these age groups are beginning to form images of their bodies, and "it is easy to internalize stereotypes," she said.

Health Services holds nutrition and health workshops which address the issue of weight and self-image. At a recent workshop, a woman said she knew that she was underweight, but did not want to gain weight because she likes herself the way she is.

Weight is determined by genetics, regardless of how much one exercizes or diets, according to Harmatz.

"Everybody is not going to be thin," Levine said. "You have to accept what you can and can't do."

Aubrey said counseling and support groups help women view their bodies realistically.

Reagan admits many Americans oppose his Nicaragua policy

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan conceded yesterday the American people have serious doubts about giving $100 million to Nicaraguan guerrillas, but said he would reject any effort to water down the aid proposal by "temporizing and quibbles."

"To delay or reduce the aid we have requested for the freedom fighters could be to send too little too late," Reagan told reporters in a question-and-answer session at the White House.

"Those who would compromise must not compromise the freedom fighters' lives nor their immediate defensive needs," he said. "They must not compromise Latin America's democracies or our own southern borders. They must not compromise freedom."

Asked whether the American public had fallen in line behind his program, Reagan said, "No, they haven't, and our own polls indicate there is a great feeling of people saying, 'What are we doing in that little country?'"

An ABC News poll released last Friday showed that three-fifths of Americans believe Congress should reject Reagan's request.

Fifty-nine percent of the 543 people surveyed by telephone said Congress should say no to the $100 million aid package, while 34 percent supported it.

"We haven't completed the job of letting the American people know all the facts," Reagan said. This is one of the reasons, the president said, why he plans to make a nationally broadcast speech on the issue Sunday night, three days before a vote by the House of Representatives is tentatively scheduled.

"In the last few days here in Washington there has been talk of compromise on this issue: smaller amounts of aid, delay in providing it, restrictions on the uses to which it could be put, all the usual temporizing and quibbles," Reagan said.

The president was asked specifically about a compromise plan, suggested by Sen. James Sasser, (D-Tenn.), calling for Congress to approve the aid but withhold it for six months as an inducement to Nicaragua's Marxist-led government to negotiate for peace.

President asks for large Saudi arms sale

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Reagan administration is informing Congress of its intention to sell Saudi Arabia $354 million in antiaircraft and anti-ship missiles, the White House announced yesterday.

Notice of the sale will be sent later in the day by the Defense Department in a classified "Pre-notification" followed 20 days later by a formal, public notification. Congress will have 30 days after that to approve or veto the sale.

The proposal is likely to touch off another political fight with Israel's supporters on Capitol Hill despite administration efforts to minimize congressional resistance by trimming an even larger request that would have included advanced electronic gear for the Saudis' US-built F-15 fighters.

Even before the formal request arrived, Sen. Alan Cranston, (D-Calif.), announced he would oppose the sale "because of the hostility of the Saudis have shown for fundamental US national security interests in the Mideast."

He said the Saudis have helped bankroll the Palestinian Liberation Organization and its terrorist attacks and "have undermined the fitful efforts of Jordan's King Hussein to move forward in the peace process" between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

Cranston said he understood the package of weapons would include 1,666 Sidewinder air-to-air missiles, 200 Stinger shoulder-fired surface-to-air missle launchers with 800 missles and 100 Harpoon air-to-ship missiles.

A State Department official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said the Saudis need American arms because the Iranian army was "at the gates" of Kuwait, which Saudi Arabia is pledged to defend under a mutual defense agreement.

Spring Break arrest total rising

FORT LAUDERDALE (AP) - Armed with a new law that bans drinking on or near the beach, police say they are nearing last year's total for Spring Break arrests of college students even though the invasion is expected to last another four weeks.

Since Feb. 21, police have reported 830 spring-break related arrests, Capt. Ed White said Monday. No new figures were available yesterday.

Last year, there were 889 arrests for the unofficial Spring Break period, White said, commander of law enforcement at the beach.

This year's total included 200 arrests over the weekend, White said.

Arrests are up because of several new laws, including one that bans drinking in the beach area or in cars along "The Strip," the street parallel to the beach. Violations of that law will account for about 20 percent of the arrests this year, White said.

Supreme Court ruling will not hurt MassPIRG

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

A US Supreme Court decision not to challenge a lower court's ruling deeming unconstitutional a mandatory fee for the New Jersey Public Interest Research Group will have no effect on the fee included on University bills here, a MassPIRG staff member said yesterday.

The ruling, made Monday and originating from a seven-year-old lawsuit brought against Rutgers University in Piscataway, N.J., by a group of students, abolishes the $4 mandatory fee at Rutgers. It does not, however, pertain to the fee at UMass because, among other reasons, the fee here is optional.

The optional $3 fee at UMass, $2 for MassPIRG and $1 for the State Student Association of Massachusetts, has recently come under fire from one campus group which has sought to eliminate it.

The group, Students for Participatory Democracy, has called the waivable fee confusing because it asks students to check off a box on their bills only if they do not wish to pay the fee.

SPD has charged that this negative check-off system deceives some people who do not wish to support MassPIRG and SSAM into paying for them.

But in a non-binding referendum held on campus Feb. 12 and 13, 2,106 of the 2,709 students who voted supported maintaining the fee on the semester bill.

Of the Supreme Court decision, Rayna Sargent, a MassPIRG member, said, "It's something that people who don't approve of MassPIRG will definitely eat up to use against us... As far as it having any legal ramification here, it doesn't."

No one opposing the campus fee was available for comment last night.

Grads pass budget; to fix later

BY SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate last night passed the recommended budget for fiscal year 1987, although the budget may be amended if the senate votes to generate more funding through a fee increase for graduate students.

Groups slated to receive funding under the budget are guaranteed the current allocation, but the conditions of the budget allow for these allocations to be increased or new allocations to be made to groups currently not funded if the tax increase is passed.

Some senators said they felt a budget had to be passed even if only conditionally so that the senate would avoid the controversy now facing the Student Government Association.

"The SGA looked like a bunch of donkeys last week, and they were. If we don't pass a budget, we'll look like donkeys too," said Matt Muir, a senator from the polymer science department.

Senate Treasurer Alison Huettner said that requests for funding from the fy 1986 budget were only 13 percent over the amount the senate had to allocate, while requests from the current budget exceeded the funds by 35 percent.

"Because of that, we had to cut (funding requests) ruthlessly, and this may be an unpopular budget because of it," Huettner said.

Although the Graduate Senate fee itself was slightly lower this school year than last year, Huettner said that graduate students are actually paying more because some services are now paid for through the Universal Resource Fee.

When suggesting the increase, Public Health Department senator Ralph Sbragia said that the increase was needed because the fee does not account for inflation.

"Our budget has to increase because the costs of the groups we fund have increased, and so they've requested more," Sbragia said.

Groups not funded in the current budget are the African Students Association, radio station WMUA and Spectrum Magazine. WMUA had not been funded previously by the senate.

Alcohol use the subject of programs

By CLARE PITONIAK
Collegian Correspondent

Two alcohol education programs will be held this semester at the University of Massachusetts for students concerned about their drinking or who have friends or relatives who are problem drinkers.

The Student Opportunity Program, sponsored by the UMass Health Services, will be offered this semester with the intention of increasing students' awareness of alcohol abuse and to help them deal with the widespread use of alcohol on campus, said John Novo of Health Services.

"Accepted patterns of alcohol abuse on campus are pretty unhealthy. For many students college is the first time they've been away from home," Novo said, increasing the chances for unhealthy patterns to develop.

Novo said some of the symptoms of alcohol abuse include gulping drinks, spending more money on alcohol than can be afforded, blacking out or forgetting minutes or even hours and, in severe cases, withdrawal symptoms such as shaking.

Problem drinkers may isolate themselves as their lives begin to focus on drinking, damaging their relationships with family and friends.

Students who have several of these symptoms are encouraged to attend the program, Novo said.

"It's an educational program. It's really for people who have some concerns about their alcohol use," he said. A student does not have to be an alcoholic to learn from the program.

This is the first time the "friends of problem drinkers" program has been offered.

The program for students concerned about their own drinking habits has been held for seven semesters. "Students have felt that it has helped them change their patterns of alcohol use," Novo explained.

The programs, which will take place after spring break, consist of five information sessions. They are voluntary, confidential and will be held after spring break.

The sessions will look at the physiological aspects of alcohol abuse and explore strategies to change unhealthy drinking patterns.

Pond used to be smaller and safe for skating

By LINA PANAGOPOULOU
Collegian Staff

About 15 years ago, the campus pond was maintained for skating during the winter, but it would be too risky now, according to the director of grounds and transportation at the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant.

"The water is coming from underground and it is moving water in warm conditions, so the ice is not really thick enough," Albert Potter said. "We used to maintain the pond for ice skating and plough the snow."

The campus pond is about 800 feet long and the widest point is 180 feet. It is about 5.8 feet deep, although the depth varies, according to Bill Lambert of the University's landscape architecture department.

Lambert said water from a brook near Lot 34 flows into the pond and the water level is regulated.

"The brook begins from the south end of Lot 34, picking up a 48 inch line, comes underneath the north part of room 116 (school of management) and under the steps of the Fine Arts Center," Lambert said. "The water is underneath, so it is too warm [about 50 degrees] to freeze. That's why that part of the pond never freezes."

When the Fine Arts Center was constructed in the 1960s, the pond was also renovated.

"The pond is larger after the Fine Arts Center construction, though a lot of people think it is smaller," Lambert said. "The shoreline moved 70 ft. south."

Students walking by the pond are familiar with the ducks and swans, which are favorites of many people, Lambert and Potter said.

"The ducks of the campus pond are wild, they fly in and out, and take care of themselves," Lambert said. "Students, visitors, and parents that come with their children feed them," both Lambert and Potter said.

Water leaves the pond through a 16-inch brook on the side near Metawampe Lawn, and flows north to the baseball field to the Miller River.

Lambert said no deaths are connected with the pond but there have been a couple of accidents.

"People have been thrown in the pond but no one wants to get there voluntarily," Lambert said. He added that when he was once in the pond, "it took me three weeks to get rid of the smell."

Accidents top police log

A car driven by a 42-year-old Haydenville woman received $1,000 in damages when it was struck by a car driven by a 24-year-old Amherst man at 12:59 p.m. Monday on the corner of North Pleasant Street and Fearing Street, Amherst police said.

When the woman stopped for a red light the man hit her in the rear. His car received about $1,000 in damages and he was cited for failure to stop at a red light.

In other police reports:

• A 36-year-old Shutesbury man caused $500 damage to property when he struck a concrete guard rail, a stop sign and a yellow arrow sign at 1:20 a.m., Monday on Pleasant Street. The accident was a result of severe fog and icy road conditions, police said.

• A nine-foot sign valued at $650 was reported stolen at 9:53 a.m., Monday from a clothing store on North Pleasant Street.

• A 1966 Mazda, which was reported stolen Sunday from Brittany Manor Apartments, was recovered at 9:40 a.m., Monday in Holyoke. The car, worth $3,500 was "burned out" and "totally destroyed," Amherst police said.

The Campus Center Hotel: conventioneers, student parties

By PAUL KARPAWICH
Collegian Correspondent

Above the Campus Center Concourse, on floors four through seven, 116 air-conditioned rooms make up the Campus Center Hotel, which is used by some UMass students to gain privacy or study space but remains obscure to most.

Completed in 1970, the hotel was part of the $22 million building plan, known as Project 11, for the entire Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center.

Although it is a campus hotel, students are its least frequent guests. They contributed to 26 percent of last year's revenue. 40 percent of the revenues come from participants in business and academic conferences at the University.

However, students - who pay reduced room rates - are said to be behind a high percentage of the partying that takes place in the hotel.

One of the hotel's chambermaids, who requested anonymity, said that after weekends many of the rooms looked as if "a tornado had come through." These situations, she added, make the job "10 times more difficult and make you want to quit."

But since student parties there have become somewhat of a ritual, the activities continue as long as they are controlled.

Schmidt said partying in rooms is private business. "As long as the noise remains respectable, we won't interfere."

Hotel rates for University of Massachusetts students are $22 per night for a single or double room and $27 for a triple. Non-student rates run are $38 for a single, $48 for a double and $54 for a triple.

William Harris, director of the Campus Center, said hotel revenues are channeled to a central campus fund used to pay expenses for the whole building.

The hotel employs 12 full-time employees and about 70 part-time student workers.

When stooges fight back

William Spain

Sometimes, I am very happy to be living in Massachusetts. Not when it is 11:05 p.m. and I need another case of beer. Not when I am paying taxes. Certainly not when I am driving in Boston. However, every time President Reagan has a funding request for his favorite freedom fighters before Congress, I am most tickled to be residing in the Bay State.

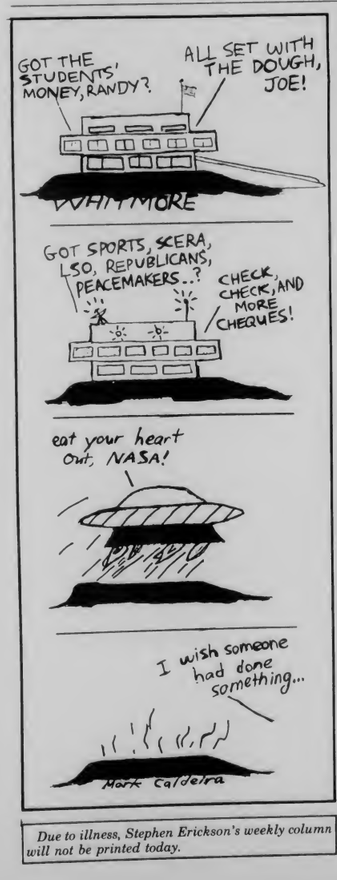
That is because I know that all of our elected representatives in Washington are not only going to vote against contra aid, but will also throw a lot of great rhetoric around in the process. From Conte to Studds, our Congressional delegation will unanimously reject administration attempts to impose a military solution in a region where there is still room for peaceful negotiation.

Unfortunately, it would seem that they have all been duped by communists. You see, they only think that their consciences tell them to oppose more aid for the contras. What is really happening is an elaborate Sandinista disinformation campaign has completely taken over their minds. I have even heard rumors that our own Silvio Conte is so enamored of the Nicaraguan regime that he will soon announce plans to purchase several Soviet helicopter gunships to show solidarity.

Shocking, is it not? To think that Marxist-Leninist fellow travelers are loose in Washington. No wonder that President Reagan and his handlers are squirming so much these days. It must be very hard for him to deal with a Congress filled to the brim with commie stooges. To combat the situation, the Executive Branch has started to ressurect the tactics of Cold War witch hunters.

It is about time. There is nothing like questioning the patriotism of your opponents as an effective tactic to fight a conspiracy. Dissent is so dangerous for a free society. After all, if everyone ran around saying what they think, we would not get much done, would we? How could we stop those Soviet tanks on their two-day drive to Texas except for the fact that the citizenry of that great state can probably muster more armanents than your average Third World country?

Perhaps the thing that upsets the White House most is that many of us KGB boosters think the nations of Central America, through the Contadora peace process, should have some say in the matter.



It is a serious departure from American historical involvement in the region, and we all know how much of a traditional guy the president is. How can he consider statements by Central American governments not written in Washington as anything but uppity? There is a certain legitimacy to the fear that discontinuing our normal string-pulling at this time will be viewed as weakness by our allies and adversaries alike.

The next thing you know, these banana republics will expect to be treated as equals. A chilling thought, such an attitude would be tantamount to spitting on the graves of such respected American statesmen as Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson.

I do not know about you, but I am at this moment clearing my throat in preparation for such a sacrilege. With a little luck, the majority of our legislators will join me in a grand collective expectoration. Perhaps if enough of us have bad colds, we can drown the mistakes of the past and set the red-baiters of the present adrift in a sea of contempt.

The best investment

Some of us come to the University to find ourselves, others come to learn the needed skills to make a decent living. This sounds like a good investment in one's future, either way. Then, once we hit the real world, we put away a bit for a vacation here, a BMW there, and maybe a house in the suburbs. Maybe we get married, have our allotted 2.2 children, and start putting away a bit for our respective futures.

As we mature into middle age, we begin to think about life insurance, IRA's and cemetery plots. All this planning is necessary, but how important is it if we neglect to plan for what truly matters? After all, the BMW will rust away, someone else will live in our homes, and our frail bodies will return to the dust from which it came.

The all-time number one bestselling book contains advice on how to make the investment which pays the highest returns known to mankind.

The investment? Eternal life. The book? The Bible.

Judging other souls

I was a little perturbed to read Rusty Denton's latest article about Christians and RAs and leftists and awareness and stuff. As a gay man, I understand the need for training in areas which, outside of the University atmosphere, might not be warranted; the purpose of this training is not so much to protect the rights of "oppressed" groups at the expense of others' rights, but to promote the idea that all human beings deserve respect regardless of what our society has determined to be the "norm."

Unfortunately, the Christian Church has historically been at the forefront of oppression against gays, Jews, women...all on the basis of the "divine" words of the Bible. It is much too easy to hide behind the words of men dead for centuries instead of dealing with living and breathing human beings, especially if these men claim authority from God Himself. Need I remind Christians that according to the Qu'ran, Mohammed was the last of the Prophets, outshining even Jesus...and the Qu'ran is also "inspired" by God? So who is to say which is right? I cannot make myself, with all my own personal frailties, the judge of other men's souls.

The purpose of the University is to allow us all to become somewhat educated, and in an atmosphere of tolerance. We all have the right to pursue our personal goals without being subjected to harrassment or belittlement and morals; it is absurd to think that a straight person could necessarily understand calculus or history any better than a gay person, or vice versa. If Christians want to believe what they believe, then fine, but they cannot expect the right to condescend to all other religious and social entities. Jesus didn't.

Set the record straight

- I canvassed Washington Tower and visited the cluster staff there in my campaigning. I made clear that I was not the same Lynne Murphy as the Washington Tower senator.
- If anything, it is in my interest not to be associated with Lynne M. Murphy as she is part of the same Budgets Committee which has produced the Budgets Act which I have criticized in my campaign.
- When one has a surname like Murphy, one must resign oneself to the fact that other people share that name.
- I chose to campaign as Lynne Murphy, rather than use my first initial, as the first initial is cumbersome, often not understood, and not what I am generally called. People who know me call me Lynne. Why should I try to estrange the voters by making my name formal? No other presidential candidate is using their initial, it is unreasonable for me to be expected to.
- There are three William Collins' living in Southwest. When Bill Collins runs for SWAG office using the name Bill Collins, he has committed the same act as I have been accused of. Why is it that I am a special case?
- One of my platform issues has been fighting deception and promoting integrity in the SGA. "Lynne Murphy endorses Bill Bennett" signs are exactly the kind of deception I have been referring to when I say "STOP THE BULL." It is reminiscent of the anti-MassPIRG campaign run last month.
- Since this issue has surfaced (yesterday) I have received harrassing phone calls to my home. I have a tape of a call from my answering machine.
- In the senate, I distinguish myself as M. Lynne Murphy because there is another Lynne Murphy. Before Lynne M. Murphy entered the senate, I made no such distinction. I was the only Lynne Murphy running for SGA president.
- There is nothing in the campaign rules which prohibits me from using my common name.
- Although it is claimed that Lynne M. Murphy has been greatly distressed by my campaign, she chose not to take action until the day of the elections. I must consider this to be a tactic to harm my campaign, rather than to try and "set the record straight" as her cohorts claim. Throughout my campaign, Lynne M. Murphy has never confronted me about this issue, nor any other concern she has had about my campaign.
- It is unfortunate that Nummo News misidentified Lynne M. Murphy as me in yesterday's budgets article. I am as greatly distressed by this as she must be.

Thank you for allowing me to set things straight.

(M.) Lynne Murphy
Candidate for SGA President

A special thank-you

A special thank you to M. Lynne Murphy for dropping her initial. I too would have confused her with Evelyn Murphy, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor. It's that special concern for voters that set her apart from the rest of the field.

Pretty in Pink: a weak Romeo and Juliet story

Pretty in Pink (★★)
Starring Molly Ringwald
Written by John Hughes
Directed by Howard Deutch

By STEFANIE SCHMALL
Collegian Correspondent

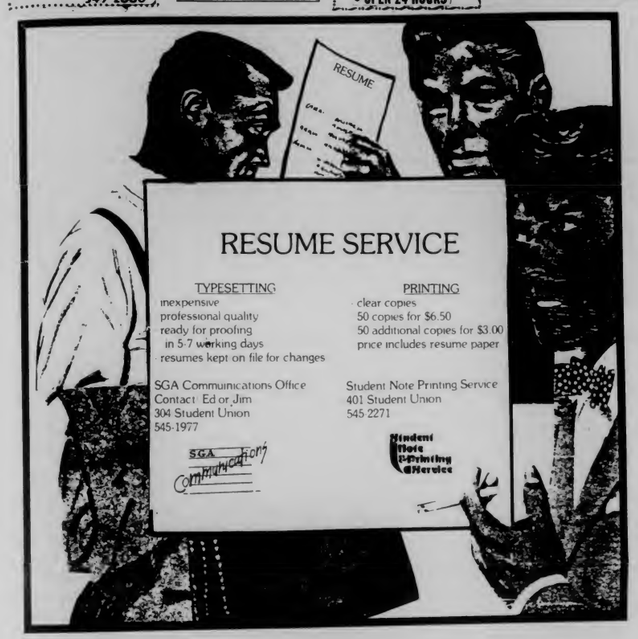
He's rich.
She's poor.
She wears rags.
He wears designer clothes.
She goes to punk rock clubs.
He goes to posh country clubs.

What happens when their two worlds collide? It could make for a touching love story but John Hughes' Pretty in Pink never quite gets off the ground.

Molly Ringwald plays Andie. She's strong, independent and seems older than her eighteen years. Her overabundance of emotion makes up for her lack of money.

Andrew McCarthy is her Prince Charming. He's gots lots of friends, a beautiful car and a prize-winning smile. But besides an occasional display of sensititvity he doesn't reveal much of his character.

Their first few encounters are adorable and we're led to believe that some great romance miraculously goes from "do you want to talk?" to "I love you" despite the fact that Ringwald and McCarthy only exchange about twenty minutes worth of dialogue in the whole movie!



What we are supposed to be witnessing are two kids who really care for each other but can't fully express themselves because their respective friends and lifestyles are pulling them apart.

The problem here is that their relationship is underdeveloped. We can't believe McCarthy when he tells her "I really want this to happen" because we don't understand why. We're never quite sure just what it is he sees in Andie.

Unlike Romeo and Juliet, we don't empathize with these ill-fated lovers. Whether they get together or not doesn't really matter because we don't seem to care one way to the other. This film wastes the talents of our two Brat Packers.

However, we may have discovered a new Brat in Jon Cryer. He is superb in his role as Andie's offbeat pal Ducky who is hopelessly in love with her. He brings two important things to the film: humor and substance. Ducky truly lets us get to know him. This role just may launch Cryer onto bigger and better things.

Probably the greatest thing Pretty in Pink has going for it is the soundtrack. There are some excellent tunes from The Psychedelic Furs, INXS, and Orchestral Manoeuvres in the Dark. Your best bet would be to run out and buy the album now and wait for the movie to come to cable.

ARTS REVIEW

By BETTY ANN MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

"First, they must be beautiful to they eye. Then, when unpacked of their literary references, they should also be beautiful to the heart."

This is how Martin Farren speaks of his own creations. Thirty of his religious papercuts, done with his wife Joan Benjamin-Farren, are now on display in the Herter Gallery. Anyone can look and see these cuts as art objects, but each one has a deeper, layered meaning, also telling a story. The visual appeal is due to their creative presentation of lacy white design on a dark background. The heart is captured by the images that these works convey.

The evolutionary process from the whole sheet of paper to intricate cut-out is not immediate. It includes complex and time consuming steps. The process starts with the choosing of a quote from a biblical source. Then, extensive research is done to see how previous scholars have interpreted this text, in the hope that their findings will enrich the total design of the cut-out. Scratch sketches are drawn and redrawn by Joan until she is satisfied with the design that emerges. Finally, Martin cuts the paper with great skill and patience. Before cutting, he looks at each piece and forms a mental game plan for cutting. Generally, he starts in the center and works his way out to the edges. The research, drawing and cutting of each one differs, depending on its size and intricacy.

The Farrens use both their eyes and their hearts to create their works. While employing precise technical strategies, they never lose sight of the importance of the sacred texts that are interpreted into art.

Myths from Africa

By BARRY LEFSKY
Collegian Correspondent

Shango de Ima, an Afro-Cuban religious "folk opera"put on by New World Theatre, was a production that mixed realism with ancient myth to create an experience that was both engaging and confusing.

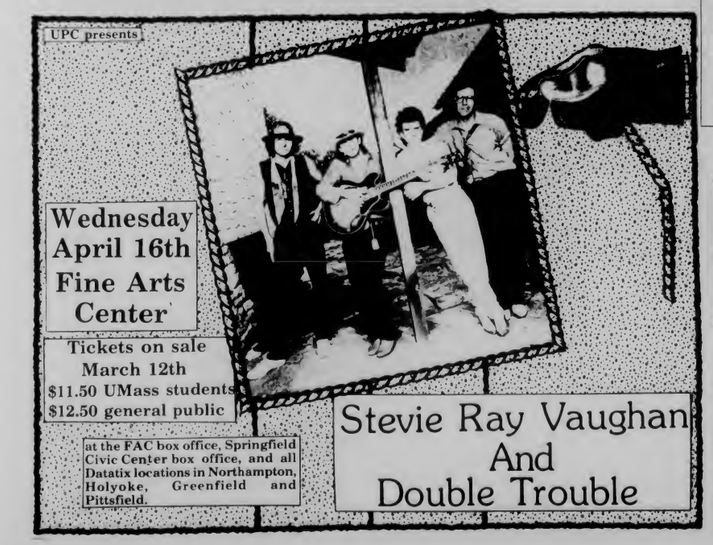
Shango de Ima is based on Yoruba religious beliefs and it is amazing that this tradition survived from Africa despite the times of slavery in this country. The Yoruba religious world is created by Olofi, represented by the Sun, who left the world to be maintained by the orishas or gods. The eldest God, Obatala, was both male and female, and was lawgiver, judge, guardian of tradition, fountain of creativity, and moral authority. Shango represents the orisha of pride, virility, and vast appetite for life; a mixed blessing since he is in constant conflict with Iku, the spirit of death, and Orgun, the god of war and political power.

Shango is the son of Obtala, and when he reaches adulthood, he wants to see his father. Obatala refuses, having been used by him, Agayu Sola, but Shango insists. Obatala agrees but tells him not to come back, that she doesn't need his bad influence on her life. Shango leaves in search of his bad traits. Shango returns to Obatala to tell her of his father, but she calls him a liar, slaps him and tells him never to return.

Shango marries Obba, a woman chosen for him, who turns her life completely over to serving him. At the same time, he carries on an affair with her sister Oya. Obba is so devoted to him that she cuts off her ears to provide him with the desired meat. He is disgusted and rejects her. Later, he is tried by Obatala for his actions, and both Obba and Oya condemn him.

Besides having difficulty with the transaction from myth to theater, I also found the political themes unclear. From familiarity with New World productions in the past, this surprises me. Early in the play, it seems that Obba's subservience to Shango was acceptable, and only later did it not seem to be the case. Shango's punishment for his contempt of these women was to be himself, a certain miscarriage of justice, since this is only a burden to women and the rest of the world, and no hassle for him. This only reinforces the idea that men can get away with anything.

Despite its faults, Shango de Ima questions interactions between men and women, and our attitudes on power and war.



Choreographer Roberto Bornell and members of New World Theatre's production of Shango de Ima.

The deadline for submissions for the "Art and Science" edition of The Spectrum magazine is March 15. See Charles Francis Carroll in the Spectrum office in the Campus Center.

Works that adhere to the theme "Art and Science" will be considered by the staff of the magazine to be represented in this year's edition. Final selections will be made in April.

The Alarm appreciates fans

By MEREDITH G. GOTTESMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The Alarm played at the Fine Arts Center last Sunday night to a very enthusiastic audience. The band, hailing from North Wales, began playing together in the summer of 1981. Although their sound has become increasingly commercial since that time, the Alarm strive to keep their performances personable and energetic.

Led by the powerful vocals of Mike Peters, the Alarm opened the show with "Marching On" from their first album Declaration, harkening back to the days when their sound was predominantly accoustic. They performed most of the songs from Declaration; "The Deceiver" and "Where Were You Hiding When The Storm Broke?" were particularly outstanding, as were the anthematic "Blaze of Glory" and a rousing version of "The Stand" which guitarist Dave Sharp and Mike Peters preceeded with the first few bars of Led Zepplin's "Stairway to Heaven." Cigarette lighters flickered everywhere.

Delivered with equal enthusiasm but somewhat lacking in both lyrical and musical content were the songs from their latest album, Strength, including "Deeside," highlighted by Peters on harmonica, "Knife Edge," and "Strength," which has received more air play on popular radio stations and MTV than any other Alarm song. They also performed "Absolute Reality" from this album and "Spirit of '76," which refers to the birth of punk in Great Britain a decade ago.

In the middle of the show, Mike Peters announced that as a way of saying thank you to all their fans for their support, the Alarm will be giving a free concert on April 12 at the University of California at Los Angeles. The event, which is set to begin at 3 p.m. pacific time, will be broadcast live via satellite all over the world. "Are you going to be there?" Peters shouted to the crowd, "I'm going to be there!"

The Alarm are definitely a band who play for the audience first and for themselves second. They are highly spirited onstage; they want to get us riled in a positive way and they often do. Their enthusiasism is heartfelt, but somewhere between The Alarm (the first EP they released) and Strength they seem to have lost sight of their original goals.

For a band which sets such high ideals for itself, they've taken on many characteristics of the bland rock and roll and top 40 bands which we are bombarded with daily. Sharp's guitar playing has evolved from accoustic jangle to a more amplified sound peppered with unoriginal leads. The lyrics, once anthematic and stirring, have become hackneyed. The message is no longer clear. The Alarm have always had the potential to move the masses with their songs. Sadly, like so many other bands, it seems that the only way that they've been able to reach the masses is to change the sound and the message that once made them unique.

The Alarm love their fans. They are incessantly nice, taking the time to speak with anyone who approaches them. "I've always admired the people who follow the band. I think the audience who comes to see us identify with me as a person; I try to open up, not keep anything hidden. There's no secrets about the Alarm, we don't tell lies," said Mike Peters, lead singer of the band.

During the performance at the Fine Arts Center, Peters continuously evoked responses from the crowd, drawing them into the show in every way possible. The Alarm has been accused of being a rabble-rousing band in the past, Peters said, but he emphatically denied the charge. "At a concert, it's not just me inciting the audience, it's everybody, it's a shared emotion, a shared energy. I come out of a concert feeling on top of the world."

"Everybody's got the same things to deal with every day, everybody's got the same kinds of hopes and aspirations. What we're trying to do is inspire some kind of will for them to go out and achieve what they want, to go out and find their own answers," said Dave Sharp, guitar player.

"Everyone who's ever heard a rock and roll record in their life, somewhere, in the back of their minds, they want to do exactly what I'm doing now," said Peters.

The enthusiasm is still there, but the Alarm have practically conformed their musical style to become accessible to a larger audience. "Strength" fits comfortably into the format of America's popular radio stations and the notoriously mainstream MTV. Peters attributes this change to maturity within the band.

from the junior varsity midway through last year and impressed immediately. The middle infielder batted .333 and was flawless in 40 fielding chances.

O'Connor will split time between second and third base. His quick bat (.315, three home runs, 28 RBI, only four strike outs) could be key to adding punch to the Minutemen's lineup.

Senior Doug Wright and freshman Steve Kern will also see time at the hot corner. Wright batted .365 in limited action last year and Kern showed enough potential in high school to be drafted by the Detroit Tigers in a late round.

Sophomore Steve Allen will take over at shortstop, moving from his spot at third base. Allen played short in high school and sees no problems in making the switch back.

"I feel confident," said Allen. "I don't see any problems. All through high school my position was shortstop."

Freshman Gary DiSarcina will also be called on for middle infield help.

The outfield will consist of junior Jay Zerner in left, sophomore Matt Sheran in center, and freshman Jack Card in right. Junior juco transfer Gene Dias is slated as the fourth outfielder.

Despite questions as to where the Minutemen will get offensive production and the overabundance of freshmen on the pitching staff, Bergquist and his players are confident of the team's potential.

"A lot of hitting won't be needed because of our pitching," said Flint. "We might have the best staff in the league with these young pitchers."

"It's more of a mystery because of unproven players," said Bergquist. "But we have seen the potential and they are only unproven to those who have not seen them."

In Florida, UMass will face Yale, Brown, Eastern Kentucky, Rollins and Big 10 power Indiana. They return north to face Temple in Philadelphia on March 28 for a three-game series before playing at Connecticut on April 1 before returning to Earl Lorden Field to host St. Joseph's for a three-game series starting April 5.

Minuteman Mutterings: Freshman reserve infielder Gary DeSarcina's uncle Joey was an All-America selection for UMass in 1969. He also played basketball and set several assist records as a guard.

With the loss of Todd Comeau, Angelo Salustri, Steve Messina and the rest of the class of 85, the Minuteman offense has been depleted. The seniors last year had 57 percent of the hits, the scored 61 percent of the runs, they hit 66 percent of the home runs and drove in 60 percent of the runs. On the mound however, UMass loses only starter Jim Knopf and reliever Matt Subocz. That duo combined for only 22 percent of the innings pitched.

Former UMass second baseman Tony Szklany, who left the team in mid-season last year, transfered to Division III Southeastern Massachusetts University in North Dartmouth and starts at second base. The Corsairs are currently on their southern trip and Szklany, despite being in a serious car accident about a week before the trip, has been playing well.

There are three former Minutemen playing pro ball at the moment with Jeff Reardon (Expos), Mike Flanagan (Orioles) and Mark Brown (Minnesota) at spring training. Todd Ezold, who graduated last season, is in the Yankees farm system as a pitcher-catcher.

UM baseball: talented but young

Rookie pitchers key to Minuteman hopes

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

Only a few days away from Saturday's opener against Yale University in Florida, this season's youthful University of Massachusetts baseball team is faced with unanswered questions and unproven talent.

Nine members from last year's powerhouse line-up (.327 team batting average) are gone including All-America first baseman Todd Comeau (.383, nine home runs, 57 RBI) and All-District shortstop Angelo Salustri (.335, nine home runs, 40 RBI). With but 10 upperclasemen on the roster, the Minutemen head South tommorrow for its nine-game, eight-day Florida trip confident that questions regarding an inexperienced pitching staff and a lack of offensive firepower will be answered.

With five freshmen on the nine-member staff, the success of the Minutemen's pitching may depend heavily on the contributions of their first-year hurlers.

"The freshman are definitely a key," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "Especially in pitching. The staff may rest on how well the freshmen do."

Bergquist, entering his 20th year as the head baseball coach at UMass, is less concerned about making up for the loss of last season's hitting.

"Our offense will take care of itself," continued Bergquist. "Not like last year, but that was unusual."

The pitching staff is led by senior co-captain Bob Kostro. The 6-1, right-hander compiled a 4-1 record last season and is 12-10 during his three years at UMass.

"Kostro has a lot of experience and he is our number one starter going into the season," said Bergquist. "He has been a tough pitcher over the last few years. He does need to develop some more."

One area where Kostro needs improvement is control. During his UMass career, Kostro has walked 115 batters over 155.2 innings and allowed 204 hits, too many for someone pegged to be the ace of the staff.

Also returning to the mound this season are middle relievers Jon Martin and Steve Allard. Martin, a senior, led last year's staff in appearances while posting a 4-1 record. Allard, a junior, was second on the team in innings pitched and finished the season at 4-3.

Senior fireballer Jeff Jensen will be used as late inning closer. Jensen was 4-0 with four saves last year while striking out 19 in 26.1 innings of work, but also displayed control problems allowing 25 walks.

"Jensen has the best fastball on the team," said Bergquist. "We'll use him as our 'Goose.' He will be used for up to six outs."

The rest of the staff is comprised of five highly touted freshmen, two of whom Bergquist expects to move into the starting rotation.

Right-hander Dave Telgheder from Slate Hill, NY, and left-hander Mike Owens out of Sauquoit, NY, will step into the number two and three spots behind Kostro.

"They are two key freshmen," said Bergquist. "If we are to be good, these guys have to come through."

The other three first-year hurlers are right-handers Ken Greer and Jeff Richardson along with left-hander Chris Slattery.

For now, Bergquist plans to use these freshmen in middle-relief, hoping that a fourth starter will emerge.

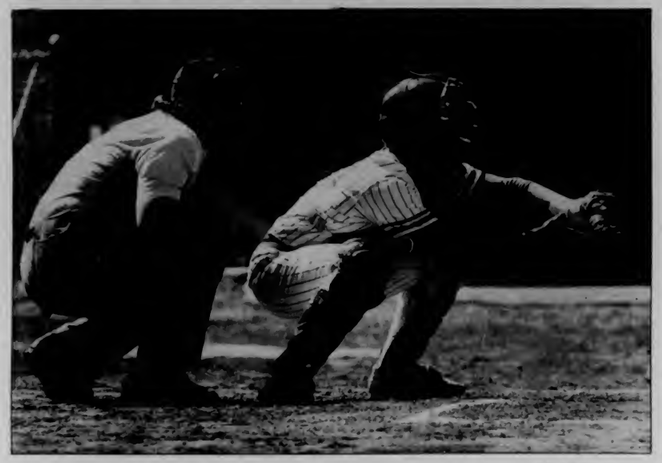
"Somewhere we have to find another starter," said Bergquist. "Either Allard or one of the freshmen."

Still, Kostro has a lot of confidence that the freshmen will come through for the Minutemen.

"The freshmen really look good," said the co-captain. "Its the best talent I've seen since I've been here. All can contribute right away."

Junior co-captain Sean Flint will do most of the catching duties for UMass this season. Last year, while sharing time with Todd Ezold (now in the New York Yankee farm system), Flint batted .306 and displayed good defensive abilities.

"He (Flint) is an excellent college catcher," said Bergquist. "He may be one of the surprises in this part of the country. Clearly our number one catcher in my mind."



Freshman Dean Borrelli from Salem, NH, is expected to see a lot of action as Flint's backup and John McKeown, named to the All-New England football team at linebacker last fall, also should see some time behind the plate.

The infield is a collection of returning part-time players. Senior first baseman Jeff Cimini will be called on to make up for much of the lost offense. Last year Cimini batted an amazing .395 before going down with a knee injury midway through the season. As a sophomore Cimini managed only a .240 batting average, so the hope is that he will return to his '85 rather than '84 form.

"Cimini is a good, productive hitter," said Bergquist. "He is a senior now and he is healthy, so I look for him to take up a lot of the slack."

Junior Rob Holiday will share time at second base with sophomore Darrin O'Connor. Holiday was brought up

Baseball Notebook

Early series is critical

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts baseball team returns from its Florida trip after spring break, they will immediately be put to the test.

The Minutemen will travel to Philadelphia for a three-game series against traditional Atlantic 10 powerhouse Temple University, March 28-29.

"The first weekend back north will be key," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "We've got three games with Temple down in Philly, one of the powers in the league each year. It's tough to come up to play them this early."

The early season confrontation should show if the young Minutemen squad was able to come together during its southern trip.

"I hope by the end of the spring trip we are playing solid baseball," said Bergquist. "Even more key this year is the trip down south. We will need to mature quickly."

The fact that Temple is an A-10 rival increases the importance of the three-game set.

"All Atlantic-10 series' are critical," he said. "We must win at least 12 games to be first or second (in the A-10). We can't lose more than two or three games in the conference.

"My goal for the team is to be in the top two in the Atlantic-10," he said. "Its a realistic goal and that gives us an opportunity to go further."

The team has the same high aspiration for the Minutemen's season.

"Winning the Atlantic-10, doing well within the division, are goals we can definitely meet," said co-captain Bob Kostro. UMass will open at home on April 5 against St. Joseph's, another league rival, with a doubleheader.

Rights march this Sunday

150 to join protest

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

More than 150 people from the University community will journey to Washington this weekend to join an estimated 200,000 others in support of a woman's right to have a legal abortion and use birth control.

The National Organization for Women is coordinating the "March for Woman's Lives" Sunday, and is expecting at least 300 of its East Coast chapters to attend.

NOW is sponsoring a similar march in Los Angeles a week later for its West Coast chapters.

"I feel this event is important to women. A woman's right to choose abortion is at stake now. It's important that people make their feelings known," said Debbie Piltch, director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy at UMass.

Chris Alibrandi, a senior marketing and sociology major, said she will join the march because it may have a powerful impact on reproductive freedom.

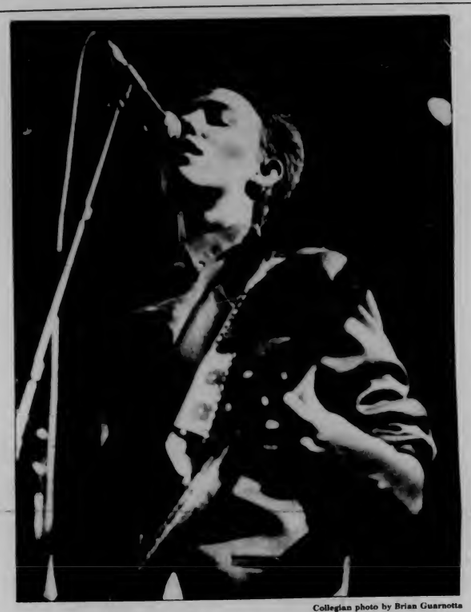
"I'm excited that women are doing something to empower themselves, but it seems like there will be a good percentage of men there too," Alibrandi said.

The event will be the largest demonstration for women's rights in the history of the women's movement, according to Nancy Arnold, coordinator of the UMass delegation to the march.

People participating in the march are being encouraged to wear white clothing.

The UMass delegation is sending two buses and is hoping to fill a third bus, in addition to about 50 people traveling by car, Arnold said, making the total "around 150 right now."

Buses will leave from Haigis Mall late tomorrow and return early Monday.



March 10 will be a lobby day for those who choose to stay over to challenge the Reagan Administration's interpretation of Title IX in the Civil Rights Restoration Act.

Title IX prohibits sex discrimination in "any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance." The administration has interpreted the act to bar particular programs from receiving federal funds, not entire institutions that have discriminatory practices, as previously interpreted.

"We're urging everyone who can to go. We've never really had a march on this issue," said Meanette Vermes, president of the Greater Springfield NOW chapter.

Vermes said she is concerned about the attempt by the Reagan Administration to overturn the Roe v. Wade decision which legalized abortion in 1973.

The Reagan Administration has unofficially required potential judges for the federal court system to be anti-abortion, according to NOW.

Fire Island residents attack UM study on deer

By JOHN C. SHEEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

A deer management study being conducted by the University of Massachusetts department of forestry and wildlife management for the Fire Island National Seashore has come under fire.

Outraged residents of the island, who say the study is responsible for the deaths of two deer, have initiated a petition with more than 2,700 signatures that calls for an end to the study. The petition is being circulated by Kenneth Larson, a Fire Island resident who lives adjacent to the park.

"I think it's disgusting what these people are doing and the manner in which they are conducting their study," Larson said.

The controversy surrounds the type of collars put on the deer to monitor them and the competency of the people working on the study. In order to track the deer movement, the deer are trapped in collapsible cages and tranquilized. The radio collars, which are nonexpandable, can harm the deer when it grows but the collar does not. The deer can also be injured if the dose of tranquilizer is too high.

Larson claims the two deer were killed by park service officials who overtranquilized the deer in two separate incidents. The officials were trapping the deer to remove two radio collars that were lacerating the necks of the deer, according to Larson.

Jim Hauptmann, park supervisor for Fire Island, later admitted one deer was killed by overtranquilization, but refuted the idea that the second deer was overtranquilized.

In a letter to Larson, Hauptmann said, "My own staff, as well as other wildlife experts from the University of Massachusetts examined the deer and determined it was

Rally today for ban on weapons testing

A rally is scheduled for noon today on the Student Union Building steps as part of a national rally called to gain support and raise awareness in banning the testing of all nuclear weapons.

On Aug. 6,1985, the Soviet Union unilaterally agreed to stop testing nuclear weapons in a program called the Comprehensive Testing Ban. They asked the United States to join them by stopping the exploding of nuclear weapons by Jan. 1, 1986, said Jennifer Johnston of the University of Massachusetts Peacemakers.

The Soviets extended the deadline to March 31, "one of the reasons is the lobbyists say that the Americans want the CTB," she said.

"The CTB will stop the development of nuclear bombs, including the Star Wars lasers which are small nuclear reactions," Johnston said.

"The Russians have not only proposed it but actually stopped the testing," she said.

The rally, sponsored by the UMass Peacemakers, will be held on the stairs of the Student Union Building at noon. Three members of the Peacemakers will speak on the Comprehensive Test Ban.

Literature explaining the ban will be distributed and petitions will be circulated during the rally. The Peacemakers will also have a table in the Campus Center where students can get postcards to send to Mikhail Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, Ronald Reagan, John Kerry, and Silvo Conti, Johnston said.

Reed College in Oregon planned the nationwide event. "Dozens of colleges are involved," Johnston said. "All of the major colleges have been contacted."

Commission to begin fund review

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

After three months of negotiations for its creation, a commission designed to review the Student Activities Trust Fund is expected to meet today in the Whitmore Administration Building.

The Chancellor's Review Commission on the SATF is a 10-member board composed of five student representatives, two faculty members and three administrators, SGA co-president Dani Burgess said.

The commission evolved from negotiations between Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson and members of Students Advocating Rights Together.

Last December, 22 members of START were arrested in Whitmore for protesting the Student Activities Office assuming control of parts of the SATF.

"I think both students and the staff of the Student Activities Office and the vice chancellor [Madson] felt the importance of the commission, and had a mutual desire to solve the problem of getting the commission off the ground," Burgess said.

One of the major roadblocks in the negotiating concerned the funding for a fourth permanant position in the UMass Legal Services Office. A statement released by Burgess and Marc Kenen of START and LSO announced that "the administration has given them [START] assurances that [LSO] will continue to have a fourth attorney in their office."

Kenen said, "The commission is a golden opportunity to work out some of the conflicts which have plagued the trust fund for decades."

However, Randy Donant, director of the SAO, said he did not give an assurance for the position. "I have not given the green light to commission a search for a fourth attorney," he said.

Donant said a decision on the fourth attorney will be made following the results of a review of LSO next month.

LSO has been without a fourth permanant attorney since last summer and has had to cut back services, Kenen said. LSO now handles only cases directly involving the University, and can only offer advice and referrals in other matters, he said.

The commission is scheduled to meet at 11 a.m. today in room 370 of Whitmore. According to a letter issued by Madson, the commission will consider " how best to accomodate student's rightful voice in the operation of the SATF."

The commission has a deadline of May 2 to prepare a report on the results of its findings and will dissolve following the completion of the report, Madson's letter said.

Special meeting tonight

The Undergraduate Student Senate will hold an emergency meeting at 7 p.m. tonight in the Campus Center Room 163 in an attempt to pass the fiscal 1987 budget.

The regular senate meeting held Wednesday night ended in chaos as a number of senators opposed to the budget proposal staged a walkout. Senate Speaker John Ruddock then adjourned the meeting because he said he believed there were not enough members present to vote on the proposal.

Senator John Crowley of Field House said he could not remember when an emergency meeting was last held. "I can't think of any issue this important," he said.

"We better pass this soon or we're in trouble," he said.

Microcomputer network proposed

By ADAM LAVINE
Collegian Staff

The Provost's Task Force on Academic Computing recently released a proposal for a campus-wide microcomputer network that would link all University buildings.

The network, which would cost an estimated $12 to $14 million, would be an "integral and indispensable part of how faculty, students, staff, and administrators perform their daily activities," according to the task force's report.

The report is only a recommendation and no date has been set for construction of the system.

The panel suggested linking buildings with a large cable, called a spine, which could carry signals for voice, data and video. Each linked building would contain one or more local area networks, or LANs, attached to the spine and connected to personal computers so staff could easily transmit and receive information.

The report also urged connecting the system to the UMass library catalog so that any user on campus could obtain book and periodical information.

Provost Richard O'Brien called the report "sensible and well thought out," and said he is anxious not to let the University fall behind in educational technology. O'Brien added that he is hesitant about initiating the task force's recomendations.

"I want to bring the issue before the Faculty Senate," O'Brien said. "I want to be sure that we can get sufficient funding before we begin the project."

The report also stated that the classroom structure would be "significantly affected" by such a computer network. A lecture hall, for example, could be equipped with a microcomputer and a large screen that would enable students to observe an instructor's interactions with the computer.

Also, in a concept borrowed from Brown and Yale Universities, an "interactive classroom" could be introduced, providing each student with his or her own computer to use during class, allowing hands-on learning.

Professor Robert Moll of the computer science department called the idea of a computer classroom "sensational," although he added, "The payoff could be uneven ... I don't think the classics or anthropology department will profit as much, except for the word processing access."

Moll added that the system was potentially a "tremendous amount of work," and the best way to approach it would be to set up the central system a "little at a time, starting in the center of the campus and slowly working outward."

The report also recommended implementing residence hall stations, which would place microcomputers in each student's room or in "computer lounges."

Douglas Abbott, associate vice-chancellor for computer and information systems, said the University is negotiating with computer firms for student and faculty discounts on equipment.

Student competing in national pool tourney

By PEDRO M. PEREIRA
Collegian Correspondent

Holly Bishop, a junior communications major, will travel to Athens, Georgia, to represent the University of Massachusetts in a national pool tournament.

Bishop last week won the annual women's pool tournament of the Association of College Unions International. The tournament, featuring pool players from different schools in New England, was held at Fitchburg State College. Bishop won 18 out of the 24 games she played.

Last year, she won the women's tournament at UMass and made fourth place in the regionals.

She will represent New England in the national championship from April 18 to 20. Besides New England, 14 other regions will have representation in the championship series.

"My chances of winning are probably very slim, but I do have the confidence that I will do okay," said Bishop. She added that she had not expected to win last week's tournament. "I don't consider myself a very good pool player. I'm just OK."

Bishop, who will be competing with some of the best female college players in the country, said she will have to practice more. "I have a lot to improve."

Before last week's tournament, she had taken two lessons from last year's male UMass pool champion, Nadar Panai.

"He's the best player I've ever seen," she said. In addition, she said she read two books on pool durting intersession to improve her skills.

"If I'm playing a competition, then winning means a lot," Bishop said, adding that when playing against her friends for recreation, winning is not as important.

Bishop said she becomes extremely nervous before a game, which "kind of gets my adrenalin going, I just think about winning." A prayer also helps, she added.

Bishop began playing pool at the age of nine with her brothers at home. She enjoys a variety of sports and said, "soccer was my favorite thing to play." After a knee injury, she became unable to play other sports and turned to the pool table to get her "aggressions out."

She said pool is "like therapy, a kind of escape. I love to listen to music and play pool. It relaxes me."

F.Y.I.: Candidates meet

The three Democratic candidates for Lt. Governor, Evelyn Murphy, the former secretary of Economic Affairs, State Senator Gerard D'Amico, Worcester and Bartholomew Conti, Boston, are scheduled to appear in a forum at 2:45 p.m. tomorrow at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

The Senate District Confrence to elect State Committee members will be held at 2:00 p.m., prior to the forum. Both are free and open to the public.

●Michael Shiloh, the Consul General of Israel to New England will speak in a lecture titled "Israel-Arab Relations-- is Peace Really Possible?" at 7:30 p.m. Sunday at the Jewish Community of Amherst.

The lecture is open to the public and is sponsored by the Jewish Community of Amherst and the Jewish Faculty and Professional group at the University of Massachusetts and the Five College B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation.

BOG gives Stockbridge official seat

The Campus Center Board of Governors voted last night to give an official seat to the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

Since Stockbridge students pay a separate activities fee to their school, the board, which is allocated $7 per student from the Student Activities Fee, does not receive any funding from the agriculture school.

"The Stockbridge fee goes directly to the Stockbridge school $3000 goes as gift money to the [Undergraduate] Student Government Association, said Jeff Collins, a board member majoring in fruit and vegetable farming.

"We [the Stockbridge Student Senate] agreed to pay $2100 in order to have a representative from Stockbridge," Collins said.

In the past, a Stockbridge representative has been elected to the board by running for one of the 10 positions representing the general student population. A representative will be appointed by the president of the Stockbridge Student Senate.

The number of seats on the board will not change by the addition of the Stockbridge seat, since the board voted to decrease the amount of at-large representatives by one seat.

There are about 300 students now in the Agriculture school, and the board will receive $7 from each student.

The official seat was created since the board's proposed constitution does not allow non-fee paying students to sit on the board, according to Alex Zucker, the chairman of the board.

The board also voted to recognize as official four other seats: a representative from Abilities Unlimited and three representatives from the Third World community.

WOMEN ON CAMPUS

"When women receive as much consideration as the fetus, that will be a wonderful day."
—Women's Studies Professor Jan Raymond

By CAROLYN PHILLIPS
Collegian Correspondent

While most women are angry at the societal conditions that limit them, Professor Janice Raymond has the intelligence, support and means to do something about it.

Raymond, a professor in the Women's Studies Department, has written two books. The latest, published little more than a month ago, is entitled A Passion For Friends: Toward a Philosophy of Female Friendship.

"It is a book that all women should read", said friend and former pupil Kathy Alexander, Program Coordinator of the Everywoman's Center. Raymond's book "expresses the deep and caring relationship; the bond between women," Alexander said.

Raymond is also one of the five founders of FINNRET, Feminist International Network on the New Reproductive Technologies. "My concern is what women have to go through to acheive what is a 'medical miracle' " Raymond said.

"There are not test tube babies but test tube women," she said. Raymond said the public doesn't know enough about the complexities of this experimentation that is called a miracle. "Some women use up two or three years of their life for these experiments, or invitro conceptions" which more frequently than believed, don't work, she said.

"When women receive as much consideration as the fetus, that will be a wonderful day," Raymond said.

FINNRET was founded by Raymond and four other women from four different countries in Holland in 1984. "The issues presented there were of such magnitude that we decided right then and there to bridge the gap across the oceans to monitor technologies and serve as an information base for women," she said.

Seven hundred countries, represented by seven hundred women are now a part of FINNRET, whose work is being funded in part by a grant from the European Parliament and a private foundation SCAGGS. FINNRET has grown substantially and quickly.

"Now we need to have a physical center and a journal," Raymond said.

"Jan has her ear to the ground on an international level," Alexander said. "She is very concerned about empowering women."

Alexander works closely with Raymond as the faculty advisor of Educator Advocates Against Violence Against Women.

"My hope is that A Passion For Friends is shared by diverse groups in regards to profession and personal life. I hope it reaches all races and cultures," she said.

"Jan has integrity. She is sincere and she respects and truly has a passion for her friends. She is challenging for both her friends and her students, yet she is very human," Alexander said.

"Every woman finds rage when looking at the oppression and stereotyping. But Jan confronts it," she said.

hit by a vehicle and suffered large contusions resulting in internal hemorrhaging."

However, the police report from the Saltaire Police Department, which investigated the incident, said the only wound was a "hole in the right rear leg of the deer bleeding."

The study is supervised by UMass professor Mark Sayre of the depatment of forestry and wildlife management.

"We have been advised by the University Legal Counsel to make no public statement until a report has been prepared. But we will talk as soon as a report has been prepared," Sayre said.

Larson, however, is continuing his campaign to stop the study.

"The people collaring the deer are grossly incompetent; it's leading to cruelty to the animals and they are very busy covering up their mistakes down here," he said.

Smith trustees discuss divestment

The Associated Press

NORTHAMPTON- Classes were cancelled at Smith College yesterday so students and trustees could attend a teach-in on apartheid and divestiture as the two sides came together for the first time for an extended period.

Participation in the teach-in was among promises trustees made last week to end 200 students' blockade of the campus administration building over the school's South African investmenmts.

There were no direct confrontations between individual students and trustees, no name-calling and no protest banners during the two-hour meeting. However, one sign posted on the campus read "will daddy divest?"

"No matter how much we differ from the places we started at, I can say we all have the same feelings about the horrible racial policies of the South African government," the head of the trustees, Euphemia H. Steffey, told 800 students who attended the session.

They gathered to hear eight of the school's 21 trustees and four members of a faculty-student committee discuss the pros and cons of shareholders using their influence to encourage companies doing business in South Africa to help reform apartheid.

Other events of the teach-in included films and small meetings.

Protesters complained during their seven-day sit-in which ended Sunday that the trustees had never explained their decision to sell only $550,000 worth of stock invested in 25 companies with South African ties. The school has a $232 million endowment.

Many trustees apologized yesterday to students for only listening to them in the past. Trustee Nancy Weiss, a Princeton University history professor, received applause when she said, "If you feel we didn't effectively talk back to you, you were right."

CANDIDATES FOR STUDENT TRUSTEE

VOTE FOR ONE IN EACH CATEGORY

DANI BURGESS
Class of 1987
Major: BDIC
Age: 22
Hometown: Leverett
Running with Lynne Murphy

DANI BURGESS

Hi! My name is Dani Burgess and I'm running for reelection as the student member of the UMass Board of Trustees. I'm running as a team with Lynne Murphy, who is campaigning for SGA President.

The most important qualifications for these two positions are experience, commitment, knowledge and integrity which Lynne and I clearly offer. Having the benefit of presently being a member of the Board of Trustees is a tremendous asset for students. Other experience Lynne and I present, past and present: Being a member of Amherst Town Meeting (working on such issues as rent control), having been involved with the Senate for three years, working for the PVTA, serving as Vice-Chair of the Student Advisory Committee to the Board of Regents, working for SCERA on the Anti-Racism Team, working as Resident Assistants, working for the UMass First Aid Unit, and writing a column for the Collegian.

Issues we have successfully struggled for in the past include preventing excessive tuition hikes, divestment, saving sports teams, working towards a responsible SGA, combatting oppression and getting more study space. We'd like to keep working on these and other issues such as acquiring a Full Costing exemption which would provide students with up to $84,000, which could alleviate the intense financial pressure the Senate is experiencing.

There is a strong possibility I would be able to get a seat on the Board of Trustees' Executive Committee, which deals with critical student issues such as the Code of Student Conduct, divestment, the granting of honorary degrees and the SGA Constitution. This is an option no other candidate would receive and exemplifies how my experience will work for students.

A vote for Murphy/Burgess is a vote for students, for proaction, for a strong positive commitment - and most important, for experience.

DENISE FORBES
Class of 1988
Major: Legal Studies
Hometown: Waltham

DENISE FORBES

UMass students have lost more rights in the past year than at any other time in history. Students of legal drinking age are now being denied the right to drink in their lounges and hallways. The Administration has attempted to seize control of student activities money. The Administration has proposed a new Student Code of Conduct that will allow them to suspend students without a hearing. The Administration has prevented the SGA Constitution from being approved by the Board of Trustees, an action that would bring legitimacy and legal standing to the Student Government.

As Student Trustee, I, Denise Forbes, will work to roll back the alcohol policy so that legal age students may drink in theior lounges and hallways. I will expose the Director of Student Activiites in his attempt to cripple student empowerment by creating a deficit in the Student Activites Trust Fund. I will vigorously oppose the proposed changes in the Student Code of Conduct that deny students their due process rights. As the Student Trustee, it will be my priority to have the SGA Constituiton, with the Student Bill of Rights, approved by the Board of Trustees in its entirety.

I, Denise Forbes, will fight for your rights. I am a founding member of Students Advocating Rights Together (START). I have been a student senator and a member of the SGA Academic Affairs Commmittee for two years. I also chair meetings of the Southwest Assembly each week. I am well qualified to be your Student Trustee. Please consider me on Monday and Tuesday. Denise Forbes for Student Trustee -- Finally...Someone who advocates change instead of pocketing it.

JOHN HUNT
Class of 1987
Major: SOM
Age: 20
Hometown: Braintree
Running with Ted Capodilupo

JOHN HUNT

My name is John Hunt and I am pursuing the office of trustee of students at the University of Massachusetts. As trustee it would be my job to represent the students' best interests, in a responsible manner, to the administration.

My primary goal if elected would be to unify the now divided student government under one common goal, that of furthering student interests. Secondly, it would be my goal to make the student government, and the administration more accountable to the students for their actions. By sponsoring a weekly Collegian article outlining the senate agenda, students would be able to voice their opinions to their senators before decisions are made. A student government which is not responsible to the students, is not a responsible student government .

I believe that these goals are attainable for a trustee who is willing to work diligently with the SGA and the administration. As part of an efficient student government before I transferred to UMass from Syracuse University. I believe that my experience there will assist me in acheiving the goals I have for the student government here. I am proud to be a part of UMass, but I am deeply concerned about the state of the current student government. Support for me on March 10, 11 is support for a responsible and respectable student government.

HANK PEIRCE
Class of 1987
Running with Jay Talerman

HANK PEIRCE

About five years ago at my best friend's house myself and Pat Pounds heard his grandmother talking to someone who wasn't there. So we asked who she was speaking to and she said to three little children, who of course were not. At that time Pat ran upstairs and came back with a fishing pole, a four foot piece of rope, and a ventriloquist's dummy. His grandmother then started talking to it in Italian, and stroking its wooden hair. This is why cats and dogs are enemies.

JOHN GALT SPARKS
Class of 1986
Major: Geology
Age: 24
Hometown: Cambridge

JOHN GALT SPARKS

Hi! My name is Joe Sparks and I'm running for student trustee. I'm using the name "John Galt Sparks" on the ballot. My detractors may claim that my candidacy is not serious, but the character John Galt from Ayn Rand's Atlas Shrugged is more representative of my campaign issues than the penguins, bulls and voodoo witch doctors my opponents have used.

What makes me the best candidate is that I get results. While others talk about what they are going to do as opposed to what they haven't done, I accomplish things. My experience includes working on the MassPIRG solar power team, being an EMT working with the Fire & First Aid Unit, student senator, chess club president, member of the University Discipline Board, Budgets Committee chairman, Rents & Fees Committee co-chairman, etc. Although holding office is nice, what counts is what you do in office.

When I was Budgets Committee chairman, the budget act was passed without any amendments in about two hours. The Student Activities Office's requested travel budget was cut. I then rewrote the budget process and got it implemented. When SAO Director Randy Donant refused to give me an accounting of his office's long-distance phone calls, I sought and obtained an order from Deputy Secretary of State James Igoe directing the University to fork over its telephone records. I actually do something to keep administrators accountable for student funds. My committee (Rents & Fees) actually obtained an agreement to abolish the $200-a-year engineering fee once the school gets its expected $4.5 million grant next year.

In summary, I should be elected based on what I have done and will continue to do.

DANIEL J. VALIANTI
Class of 1987
Major: Political Science/ Communications
Age: 20
Hometown: Marlborough

DANIEL J. VALIANTI

As a candidate for Student Trustee, I, Daniel J. Valianti, have taken my campaign to the students. I have gone door to door in every residence hall on campus. In my conversations with students I have found three essential elements missing from our student governement: unifying leadership, planning and creativity, and accountability.

The state of student government on this campus is critical. Our financial situation is in disarray. We lack the student leadership necessary to unite the irresponsible extreme elements of student government and get some concrete things done. The Student Trustee has a role to play in bringing student government back to normal. We need a Student Trustee who is a leader, who is not afraid to take on the challenges posed by limited revenue, deteriorating facilities and greater demand on goods and services.

We need a Student Trustee who will foster planning and creativity in government. The ongoing financial crisis is an example of past lack of foresight and planning. We need a student trustee who will work with the campus president to establish a three-to-five-year plan to deal effectively with the future.

Most importantly we need a Trustee who will bring accountability back to student government. We need a Trustee who cares what the students think, who will work hard to keep them informed, who will actively seek them out and take seriously their opinions. Accountability is the cornerstone of representative government. As your Student Trustee, I will be accountable.

Together, we can make a difference. I am offering a plan for change. A unified, creative, efficient and accountable student government is achievable. To accomplish this, I respectfully solicit your support. Please vote on March 10 or 11.

CANDIDATES FOR SGA PRESIDENT

BILL BENNETT
Class of 1987
Major: Political Science
Age: 20
Hometown: Auburn

BILL BENNETT

Hi, my name is Bill Bennett and I am asking you to join me in making students' concerns the number one priority in the SGA. Currently the SGA seems to be operating as a self-serving body which places individual concerns before those of the UMass student. This needs to be changed! I can do this by creating an efficient network of communication between the students and the SGA leadership. This can be accomplished by activating the now-silent President's Council, which is an organized meeting of House Councils, Area Governments, the Senate and the SGA leadership. The Council's priority is to develop of an effective system of outreach. The President must become accountable to all constituencies.

UMass needs a President that will initiate policies from experience and transfer them toward real progress. For example, the alcohol policy must be changed. I am now working on this policy by being a vocal participant on the Residential Committee. As President, I will continue to strongly advocate for a less restrictive policy. Currently many RSOs are in danger of becoming extinct. The President needs to initiate policies that will aid RSOs by pulling the students together. The President must lead the SGA into a position that will regain control of the SATF and allow the existence of all RSOs to continue. The tuition policy must be reformed so that it meets the needs of the many and not the few! Fee increases must be curtailed. Student cannot afford the $210 fee increase proposed for 1987. What about 1988?

These goals can be achieved. But they must be achieved through a plan. I have the goals and the means, just as I have the experience and a record of proven concern for students. Please remember me, Bill Bennett. I am your ticket for real progress.

TED CAPODILUPO
Class of 1987
Major: Political Science
Age: 20
Hometown: Braintree
Running with John Hunt

TED CAPODILUPO

My name is Ted Capodilupo and I and am seeking the office of Student Body President. If elected, I would conscientiously prepare for every SGA meeting as I would an important examination. I am confident that I will provide the responsible representation this Important job requires.

The first goal I will be looking forward to accomplishing is encouraging the student senators to work together to promote one common cause- the students' interest. Secondly, I will be dedicated to enhancing the reputation that UMass so rightly deserves.

In addition, it will be the goal of my administration to bring about administrative justification for the consistent disregard for the requests of the students. Only when our administrators justify these impositions upon the students will we be able to understand the Administration's motives. This explanation will be insured through the publication of an unbiased student government newsletter.

Consequently, my goals are realistic and, if elected, I will fight for them. I feel I am the best qualified for this position as I have formerly served as a senator in the SGA. This position has enabled me to learn the complexities involved in the University's legislative process.

Frequently, the student body has been accused of being apathetic. I submit that this apathy has been induced by an administration unconcerned with the needs of students. On March 10 and 11, do not display this apathy. Instead, devote one minute of your time, and help me to help you.

LYNNE MURPHY
Class of 1987
Major: Linguistics/ Philosophy (honors)
Age: 20
Hometown: Newark, N.Y.
Running with Dani Burgess

LYNNE MURPHY

Hi, my name is Lynne Murphy and I am running for SGA President. I am campaigning with Dani Burgess who is running for reelection as Student Trustee.

I feel that I have valuable experience which qualifies me for the position of Campus President far above that of any other candidate. Since last semester I have worked as Assistant to the SGA Presidents. I have been in the office, I know how it works, and what issues affect it. I am also a resident assistant and am currently serving my third semester in the Student Senate. I feel that these experiences give me both valuable and unique qualifications to be SGA Campus President.

Once in office, there are many issues and projects Dan and I plan to take up. One of these is the problem of adequate study space on campus. With the imminent closing of Goodell Library, student face the impending loss of much-needed study space. We will work hard with the administration to ensure that there is plenty of study space for all students.

Another issue of crucial importance to us is the residential alcohol policy. We have many practical proposals for alternatives to the current policy, alternatives which allow students to make their own decisions about their alcohol use within their homes, the residence halls.

I feel that the four most important qualifications for SGA Campus President as well as Student Trustee are knowledge, commitment, experience and integrity. Both Dani and I exhibit these qualities to a high degree. Once elected we will work hard to enhance all of our lives here at UMass. We believe UMass is and should continue to be a diverse institution where every student is heard and represented. I encourage you to vote on Monday and Tuesday and to vote for the pro-active ticket, Murphy/Burgess.

JAY TALERMAN
Class of 1987
Major: Communications
Age: 22
Hometown: Medfield
Running with Hank Peirce

JAY TALERMAN

I am unrelenting in achieving these goals, among others, for me and you:

Student Rights: I feel that all due rights can be fulfilled via a highly advanced form of zombifying voodoo on the student body thus eliminating all those silly arguments etc.

Campus Upkeep: I propose to completely cover the campus with a massive Tupperware dome sealing in all freshness.

Student Security: I plan to replace our inadequate security force with a huge army of fully armed ninja warriors.

Academics: I intend to have the major of every student switched to forensic medicine. In addition, each student will be required to view at least 140 hours of Quincy per semester.

Extracurricular Activities: I will A) Schedule several all school field trips, to the Mall or Guam, and B) Bring the members of Live Aid to campus and pit them against the members of Farm Aid in a full contact Roller Derby with the Queen of England acting as referee.

All of the true visionaries are gone. Lenny Bruce has become Lee Iacocca and god knows why Dick Clark is even still alive.

So why am I using this space today peddling my own mishmash of bullshit?... Who gives a shit really, just the fact that I'm here, amongst all of this has got to be some kind of symbol, at least to me, and if you think that ego has nothing to do with this whole goddamn election, you're dead wrong.

My name is Jay Talerman and I may not have the lingo, or the future that you want in the SGA Presidential office but I do have my own vision, which has got to count for something, anything....For as Tom Waite says, "In the land of the blind, the one-eyed man is king."

1986 ELECTIONS

Student Government Association

All undergraduates are eligible to vote for:

- One student trustee.
- One campus president.
- Members of the Campus Center Board of Governors, a 32-member student body that oversees Campus Center operations and space allocation. The exact number of seats open has not yet been determined.
- Members of the Residential Committee.
- Members of the Undergraduate Student Senate.
- Off-campus students will vote for: one commuter area spokesperson, and one commuter area treasurer.

There will be two referendum questions:

1. "Should we, as students, continue to fight the administration over continued infringement of our rights?"
2. "Should students have primary responsibility in directing the day-to-day operations of the professional staff of the SATF?"

This year's SGA election is different from past years in that students will cast separate votes for student trustee and campus president. Previously, candidates appeared on the ballot as teams - or as one student seeking to hold both offices - and voters chose one team.

However, this year three pairs of candidates have declared themselves teams. Running on tickets together, for student trustee and campus president respectively, are:

Dani Burgess/Lynne Murphy; John Hunt/Ted Capodilupo; and Hank Peirce/Jason Talerman.

Running individually for student trustee are Denise Forbes, John Galt Sparks, and Daniel J. Valianti.

Running individually for president is Bill Bennett.

The Pogues' happy hour:

Beer, beer, beer brings out the band's best

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS and KELLY SIEGER
Collegian Staff

When asked what is wrong with the American music scene, Shane MacGowan, the lead singer for the Pogues said "Hank Williams is dead," and "Charlie Parker is dead."

MacGowan answered this and other questions with a sinister grin and a hissing laugh. As a matter of fact, just about everything he said backstage after the band's Wednesday night Pearl Street performance was followed by MacGowan joyously bursting out with sidecracks.

And why shouldn't MacGowan be in a good mood? MacGowan said things are going bloody well. He said it is his band's first US tour and the Pogue's second album, Rum, Sodomy, and the Lash, will be released domestically soon.

MacGowan was in the mood to talk about everything from Prince Charles, to favorite brands of beer, to singer/songwriter Elvis Costello, who produced the band's latest album.

"Prince Charles is an idiot," MacGowan said, responding with a crackling laugh, lasting for more than 10 seconds, as he shifted his sunglasses to a more comfortable position. Then, after swilling down another Rolling Rock beer, MacGowan said, "We're all idiots."

MacGowan said he lives in England but was raised in Ireland. He said it was his experience listening to musicians such as Tom Waits, John McCormack, Lou Reed, the Sex Pistols and Luke Kelly which influences his songwriting, particularly on the latest record.

As MacGowan decided to reach for a Guinness Stout, (their favorite beer), he and co-Pogue James Fearnley discussed working with Costello.

"Elvis is great, we love to work with him," MacGowan said. Trying to critique Costello's long-awaited new album King of America, he said, "It's not quite as good as it could be, but it's not quite as bad as it could be," he said doubling over in laughter.

Fearnley, who plays guitar and accordian, said his major musical influences besides God are the Velvet Underground, the Sex Pistols, Miles Davis and Leonard Bernstein.

He lashed out at the fads in music.

"Most of the videos are rubbish," Fearnley said. "We've made a couple of videos but not like the ones out."

Since the band's first performance at King's Cross in London in October of 1982, both Fearnley and MacGowan said they are becoming more known, but they don't let it get to them.

"When we play now, the feeling hasn't changed," Fearnley said. "The feeling is exactly the same."

Cait O'Riordan, the band's bassist, who is engaged to Costello, said she enjoys playing with the band and is excited about the 10-performance tour.

She referred to Costello as "his majesty," and said his new album "is excellent, it's all about me."

Frank Murray, the band's manager, said it takes people time to get used to the band, because of their uniqueness.

"We are not a band full of sex symbols," Murray said. "Nobody dresses in the trendy clothes, we're just ourselves."

Reacting to his manager's statement, MacGowan raised his bottle in agreement, offering another round of beers.

Shane MacGowan, lead singer of the Pogues

Pogues' reputation carries on

It was no surprise for those who know of the Pogue's reputation that the band's Wednesday night performance at Pearl Street was an evening of drinking stout and dancing jigs.

The Pogues are a London based band made up of eight members -- half English and half Irish. They orginally performed under the name Pogue Mahone until London newspapers realized that the name was Gaelic for "kiss my ass." Their second album Rum, Sodomy and Lash, produced by Elvis Costello, has brought them much of their popularity.

The band's fifteen song set was composed of the traditional Irish folksongs and Sex Pistol-inspired sounds that sold out every stop on the Pogue's UK tour. Their music comes across well live, because the Pogues base their sound on such traditional instruments as the tin whistle, the accordian and the mandolin.

It made no matter that despite rumors Costello, who is engaged to the band's bassist Cait O'Riordon, didn't make an appearance; it was still St. Patrick's Day early, and all that was missing was the green beer.

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

The best movie bets this weekend are at the Mountain Farms Mall. Woody Allen's best film to date Hannah and Her Sisters shows the culmination of his writing and directorial maturation. He is one of the greatest (if not the greatest) American filmmaker and our only true auteur.

This comedy has two major plot lines. The first concerns Elliot (Michael Caine) who is happily married to Hannah (Mia Farrow) but secretly lusts after Hannah's younger sister Lee (Barbara Hershey). Elliot goes out of his way to be around Lee and thinks he will go crazy if he doesn't openly declare his love to her.

The second major plot line in the movie deals with Hannah's first husband, Mickey the hypochondriac (Allen). After years of needlessly going to doctors, Mickey may finally have something seriously wrong with him. Mickey searches frantically for the meaning of man's mortality and his existential dilemma. Mickey's quest for truth causes him anxiety and us laughs. Never before has Allen created such lively, emotionally complex, and diverse characters. Hannah and Her Sisters is his masterwork.

Another major film of the mall is Terry Gilliam's Brazil, an off-beat look at an Orwellian dystopia. Many may know Gilliam as the mostly silent American in Monty Python's Flying Circus who is responsible for the hilarious cartoons in their films and T.V. programs.

This black comedy stars Jonathan Pryce as Sam Lowery an underling in the Ministry of Information who when he isn't covering for his boss, spends his time dreaming about being a brave winged warrior fighting monsters to be with an ethereal who calls to him from the sky.

His boring everyday life in this grey, fey, world is suddenly destroyed when his department makes a mistake. This error soon sets Sam against a perversely paranoid world where a nonunion ductworker is a swashbuckling rebel who always arrives to save the day.

I should warn you that this is a very weird movie. A friend described this movie as a funny but disturbing psychotic episode. But I would see it all the same. You may want to see it at least twice.

Amherst Cinema has a good double feature through Saturday (1984 and Dr. Strangelove). These two films, one a bleak and devastating drama, the other a biting black comedy will make very good companion films to Brazil.

Results versus efforts

This year's election for the two top Student Government Association positions presents more choices than in the past, since voters will now choose separately the University student trustee and the campus president.

Traditionally the field of candidates is populated by students who spout virtually identical platforms about unifying the undergraduate senate, making the SGA accountable and fighting for student rights. For the most part, this year is no exception. But among the six student trustee hopefuls there is one, Joseph Sparks, a.k.a. "John Galt Sparks," whose behind-the-scenes accomplishments on behalf of students far outstrip the efforts or rhetoric of his rivals.

Only two other trustee candidates show qualifications for the job: Dani Burgess, the incumbent, and Denise Forbes, a founder of Students Advocating Rights together. They have worked hard, sometimes by conciliation and sometimes through protest, to counter the administration's efforts to take over the Student Activities Trust Fund. But while publicly embroiled in the SGA-SATF mess, neither has much to show in terms of concrete accomplishments.

Meanwhile, as chairman of the SGA Rents and Fees Committee Sparks has secured a commitment from Whitmore to phase out a $200-a-year engineering fee. As chairman of the Budgets Committee previously, he took some questionable stands, such as refusing to fund the UMass yearbook. But he also stood up to the Student Activities Office director, Randy Donant, cutting some SAO allocations and prompting an audit of the office's telephone records after Donant refused to turn them over.

Sparks is less vocal than Forbes, less articulate and politically suitable than Burgess. But he knows when to compromise with administrators, when to confront them and when to try to go around them. While visible student activists take credit for what they are trying to do, Sparks gets things done and rarely seeks the limelight. These, not just good intentions, are the qualifications for student trustee.

In the race for campus president, the Collegian decides not to endorse a candidate. Lynne Murphy and Bill Bennett, the only viable choices, have ample SGA experience and good ideas, but both lack strong leadership skills. Neither seems to command much respect among diverse factions of the senate, which is necessary if one is to "unite" the squabbling body.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

Letters from the editor

Larry Bouchie

UMass gaffe No. 1: In his State of the State address earlier this year, Gov. Michael Dukakis used a pleasant slide show to demonstrate the wonderful things that go on in Massachusetts. After discussing the fine system of public higher education, he gave a small pat on the back to a private institution in this state, MIT.

Up goes a slide of MIT's Salisbury hand, one of the most advanced robotic hands in the world. In fact, I've been told only three exist in this country; one is in California near its creator, the other is at MIT, and the last is at a fine institution of public education -- UMass/Amherst. Good research, Mike.

UMass gaffe No. 2: Two photographs of UMass/Amherst were used to illustrate a Learning section piece by Chancellor Duffey in Sunday's Boston Globe. One of the photos used was the classic view from the Morrill Science Center across the lawn before the Campus Pond, across the end of the pond and right over to -- Thompson.

That's right, they used a photo taken before the ground was even broken for the Tower Library. Well, that's actually not so bad, it's still a great shot of the lawn, the pond, the trees where the Tower now stands, and Thompson towering over the pond in place of the library. Another pat on the back for good research about the University.

As for the content of Chancellor Duffey's article, it began as a predictable (but necessary) lament about the lack of proper, continued, and imaginative funding for public higher education. Soon, however, Duffey offers some substantive suggestions for providing funding and practical channels for those funds.

Among Duffey's suggestions; greater attention to our operating budgets, a funding delineation by the Board of Regents between UMass, the community colleges, and the state colleges, rewarding those colleges "willing to undertake some controversial measures like experimenting with achievement tests to make assessments of learning," allowing campuses greater fiscal autonomy by returning tuition revenue to individual campuses in lump sum, and bringing maintenance up to workable par with one time special allocations from the Legislature.

That's a lot of ideas and it's instructive to see Duffey's suggestions out in the open and tied up in one package.

WMUA has apparently extracted a verbal promise that it will be able to do a short telephone interview with NBC television talk show host David Letterman. 'MUA is now negotiating the exact date for the interview. Stay tuned.

As an individual and not as a Collegian editorial board member, I'd like to offer some good luck to all the SGA candidates in next Monday's and Tuesday's elections. On top of all the other things the SGA is involved with (budgets, fiscal control, judicial hearings, and even mid-term exams), this is a taxing time for everyone, and particularly the candidates. May the best of them win.

Larry Bouchie is a Collegian columnist.

Rationalization is vital

Herb Ramy

My first two years at the University, I was like most students. I went to my classes, and as a rule even did my homework. This isn't to say that I never had a good time, but my partying was relegated to the weekends, where I'd been told it belonged.

During the week I would see juniors and seniors drinking, going out, in short, enjoying themselves. I remember looking at them and saying to myself, "Won't they ever grow up?"

Then came this year, my junior year. The first year that you're old enough to do things that had been beyond your grasp. Fortunately, in this year you're not quite old enough to have to worry about the real world just yet.

This was the year that I learned the most important of all collegiate rules. "Nothing is so important that it can't be blown off."

Some of you may find it difficult to blow off your courses, studying, etc., because of a guilty conscience. For those with this particular problem, you must learn the all important skill of rationalizing. As it was so aptly put in "The Big Chill," "Rationalizations are the only thing in this world more important than sex. Did you ever try to go a whole day without a good rationalization?" This skill will make the inconceivable conceivable, and the impossible possible.

For instance, it's Thursday and you have an exam on Friday. After classes have finished you go back to your room. By now it's about 3 p.m. Normally this is when studying would commence, but watch how a few good rationalizations can save the day.

"Well, it's already three, and I'll be eating soon. It doesn't make sense for me to start studying now when I'll have to stop so soon."

This is only a rough example, but I think you get the picture. After dinner, of course, you need time to digest. After digesting you might be a little too tense to begin studying right away, so a quick beer or two might be in order. After the first few beers, we all know that it's impossible to study. You might as well continue partying. See how easy it is?

I'm not saying to make your life one long party, that would be boring. The way I look at it, we're all here to get an education, so we can get better jobs, so we can make more money, so we'll be happy. What's wrong with just skipping to the happy part every so often?

Just remember, whenever you feel that all your work is dragging you down, use a little rationalization and blow something off. You'll be glad you did.

Letters

Alcohol out of place on campus

To the ill-advised individuals who were instrumental in reopening the floodgates of alcohol onto the campus of the University of Massachusetts, I address this letter.

What will it take for us to realize the insidious nature of alcohol and the twisted role it plays in depreciating the minds of both the young and old? Have we not yet learned from the host of nightmarish episodes on campus that dignity is the only thing that cannot be preserved in alcohol?

Perhaps we need to remind ourselves that this is not an institution to shelter the pickled minds that traverse the hallways in epidemic proportion. Rather, this is an institution designed to cultivate and enrich the minds of those whose primary focus is on intellectual stimulation. I believe it is our full time responsibility as students, faculty, and administrative officials, to provide and maintain a nurturing atmosphere on the campus of the University of Massachusetts. Let the barkeepers in the Amherst area, whose businesses thrive on such bacchanalian tendencies, cater to the special needs of each individual.

In writing this controversial article, I understand that I play the role of "skunk at the garden party," but is it not a mistake for this university to abase itself and peddle the very chemicals which pollute and alter the minds of those whose reputation it depends on? Is it also not reckless logic to pay insurance premiums in excess of $30,000 a year just to witness the palpable destruction?

It appears to me that this unconscious decision was consummated during the cocktail hour, for it indeed reeks of ignorance in its most blatant form. Cheers.

Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity: 75 years in the struggle

By C. RON ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Seventy-five years ago, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity was founded by ten black men of vision and talent. Today the organization has guided over 78,000 college men to become successful leaders in the United States and around the world.

Recently, more than 200 of these leaders assembled in formal attire at the Condesa Del Mar restaurant in Chicago for a Founders Day celebration.

The event was sponsored by seven alumni chapters headed by their polemarches, or presidents. Each polemarch gave remarks around the theme: 75 years of achievement, 1911-1986.

Attorney Earl B. Dickerson, past grand polemarch and Laurel Wreath recipient, said: "We should rededicate ourselves to carry on the full victory of the struggle that our founders began 75 years ago for freedom, justice and equal opportunity for our common humanity and our individuality, character and abilities."

The featured speaker of the banquet was Henry E. Parker, Connecticut state treasurer and chairman of the Kappa Foundation.

He called for the emergence of "exceptional men to improove the social, political and economic conditions of black Americans."

"The leadership legacy of founder Elder Watson Diggs," Parker said, "was to convince capable black men to let excellence be their guide and achievement their goal."

The organization raised $1,750 in cash contributions for the Kappa Alpha Psi Foundation, established in 1981 as a non-profit, publicly supported organization.

The president of the UMass chapter, David Walker, said the actual anniversary is Jan. 5. His fraternity attended Founders Day functions in Boston and Hartford.

"At Boston Alumni we were given an award for outstanding community service among the chapters," Walker said. "Nationwide, we are the only black Greek organization that is a member of the Inter-Fraternity Council, and therefore recognized by the administration.

"As far as an actual formal celebration of the founding of the fraternity, we will not be doing that. However, we'll be going on as we have been doing in the past ... conducting community services," he said.

Last semester was a very productive one for the Alpha Kappa Psi Chapter at UMass. It started the Flagship-Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS) scholarship fund, which generated $150. The scholarship is in memory of John Wright, a former CCEBMS student who drowned at Puffers Pond four years ago.

In conjunction with the Inter-Fraternity Council, Alpha Kappa Psi built the park project at Fort River Elementary School in Amherst.

The chapter consists of five undergraduates whose precinct extends to Springfield.

"We will be focusing our efforts in Springfield, which is a thirty mile radius," Walker said.

Alpha Kappa Psi fraternity will be working with CCEBMS in the annual orientation program for students in the METCO program, which places students from urban areas in suburban primary and secondary schools. The program has been highly successful during two decades of busing METCO students from Boston's poorer neighborhoods to schools outside the city.

UMass women crushed, 88-43

Penn State rolls in league tourney

Compiled from staff reports.

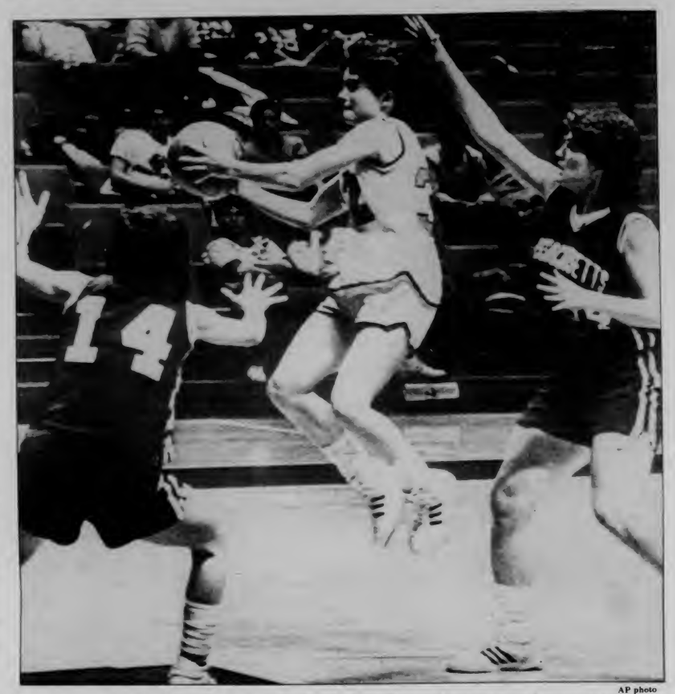
MORGANTOWN, W. Virginia - The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team had its rocky season abruptly halted yesterday, as Penn State University embarassed the Minutewomen, 88-43, in their Atlantic-10 Tournament quarterfinal game at West Virginia University.

The loss ends UMass' season at 11-17 while the 16th-ranked Nittany Lions improve to 21-7 and advance to a semifinal game against Rutgers today. UMass is now 0-4 in all league tournament games it has played.

Penn State's explosive offensive attack was led by All-American sophomore guard Suzie McConnell and junior forward Vicki Link who scored 15 points each. The Nittany Lions also got 10 points each from junior guard Lisa Faloon and sophomore center Bethany Collins.

The Minutewomen, who shot a dismal 33.9 percent from the field, were led by senior guard Barbara Hebel's 14 points and senior guard Juanita Matthews' 11.

UMass (playing without sophomore front line starter Sue Burtoft, who is out with a broken finger, and valuable sub Tara Lewis, who is out with a knee injury) saw the game end quickly as the Nittany Lions used a 14-2 run early in the first half to jump out to a ten point lead, 18-8, with 10:55 remaining in the half.



Unable to stop the 6-2 Link inside or the transition game of the speedy McConnell, Massachusetts crumbled.

The Minutewomen trailed 44-18 at the half, their worst of the season as PSU's pressure defense forced numerous turnovers. UMass gave the ball away 24 times in the game, many leading to easy Lion baskets.

After the disasterous first half, the Minutewomen were unable to recover from the early deficit as McConnell's coast-to-coast drives continually thwarted UMass pressure and extended the Penn State lead.

Link led all rebounders with nine. Senior forward Karen Damminger, playing with a sore shoulder, led the Minutewomen with eight rebounds and also led the team with five assists. UMass was outrebounded by a 42-29 margin. The 43 points scored by the UM was a season-low along with the 18 points scored at halftime.

For seniors Hebel, Matthews, Damminger, captain Jerrie Bernier and Rebecca Kucks, the game was their collegiate finale.

Minutewomen gymnasts home against UNH

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, coming off a second place finish in last Sunday's New England Championships, will travel down to West Point this weekend to compete in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships.

The women's gymnastics team will be home for their last meet of this season on Saturday at 1 p.m. at Boyden Gymnastics Center.

The Minutewomen, 5-7, will take on the first place University of New Hampshire in what head coach Chuck Schiebler said should be "a good contest."

Schiebler, who has coached U.N.H. for two years before coming over to UMass, will be interested to see how his recruits have faired. "They're my girls," Schiebler said. "I brought most of them into collegiate gymnastics."

The meet will also be a collegiate finale for seniors Sue Allen and Tricia Harrity, competing in Boyden for the last time.

The Minutemen, meanwhile, are seeded sixth going into the weekend's competition, and are likely to finish in that slot, according to coach Roy Johnson.

Although Johnson is not too optimistic about a high UMass finish, he feels that there are several competitors on the team who should do very well in the individual competition. "We really can't expect to finish better than fifth, but we are really looking forward to getting some of the guys into the individual finals on Saturday."

UMass has potential individual finalists in Jay Ronayne and Phil Gorgone on the floor exercise, Steve Baia on the pommel horse, Roberto Weil on the still rings, and captain Eric Ciccone on vaulting.

But the best shot UMass has for taking an individual event would have to be Jay Ronayne on the high bar as he is the New England champion in the event.

UMass weekend previews

Track teams in Easterns

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's indoor track teams will be in their final meets of the season this weekend with the men competing in the IC4A championship at Princeton and the women heading to Yale for the ECAC title meet.

Both teams are coming off of fourth place finishes in the New England championships last weekend and are hopeful going into this weekend's meet against the best teams in the East.

"We'll enter our relays and four individuals, but the relays have the best shot, the competition's pretty rough," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "When you're up against the Villanovas and Georgetowns of the track world, you just have to hope for the best, but I know our kids are ready."

The UMass men (3-2 on dual meets this season) will send a trio of solid distance men into the 3,000.

John Pannacione, Paul Stanislawzyk and Peter Leary will compete in the race against top-notch competition, but O'Brien likes their chances anyway.

"They're pretty experienced kids in the distances, and although they've qualifiedfor other races, I think the 3,000 is more suited for them," noted the veteran coach.

Sprinter Rawle Crichlow will run in the 60-yard dash for UMass in the other individual action.

In the relays, UMass will enter Larry Cuddy, Neil Osbourne, Rich LaBarge and Crichlow in the mile. They were third in New England.

The team of Nick Watkins, Dan Lunardini, Mark Theniea and Ted White will enter the two-mile relay. They took a strong second at the New Englands against the likes of Boston University and Northeastern, two traditional Eastern powers.

Finally, the unit of Paul Stewart, Steve Tolley (both sophomores), Joe Hagan and Leary will took for a high place in the distance medley relay. They too, were second in New England.

For the UMass women (2-2 in dual meets this season), freshman Pam Hughes will enter the long jump and the 55-yard dash in the ECAC meet at Yale University.

"Pam is a good athlete, her fourth place (at 17-10) in the New England long jump isn't an indication of her talent, she's a 19-foot jumper," said coach Kalekeni Banda. "She is capable of a top three finish. She's tough."

Freshman middle distance runner Sonja Vaughan will enter the 800. She was seventh in New England in the event with a 2:19, but like Hughes, Banda believes she has her best ahead of her.

UMass will also enter the mile relay team of Barbara Cullinan (the top runner in the 600 in New England), Chris Bates, Vaughan and Kayla Morrison. They placed second in New England with a 3:53.40.

"I think it will be a good test for our younger runners, this is a meet with a ton of top competitors," said Banda. "We're looking pretty solid right now, if we can get our best efforts off, we'll look even better."

In the only other varsity action this weekend, the men's and women's gymnastics teams will be at the Easterns and home against New Hampshire respectievly (see story).

Finally, although not a varsity sport, the UMass men's voleyball team has been cleaning house with an 11-3 record and third-place ranking in New England.

On Saturday, the Minutemen will be at Middlebury for a tri-match against Middlebury and Springfield.

"Let me tell you this Jack, we're ready, we're psyched, we're going to destory them," said self-appointed team spokesman Roger Chapman. "They better be ready for us."

O'Neill and Kerry see SAFA home

By LESLEY CLARK
and ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON -- Capping a three-day lobbying blitz on Capitol Hill, 46 University of Massachusetts students yesterday met with House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. and Sen. John F. Kerry.

Both Massachusetts Democrats assailed President Reagan's policies, and Kerry defended his support for the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit law.

O'Neill, addressing members of Students Advocating Financial Aid in his private chambers, bid them farewell, noting it was the last time he would have the chance to speak to them. He will not seek reelection to the House this fall; for the past several years he has met with SAFA during the group's annual trip to Washington.

"It's with regret, but it's great to see you people, because you're the future of our state and country," O'Neill said.

An eight-hour bus ride through the night, a shooting across from the group's hotel and sore feet were the unglamorous parts of SAFA's trip. Page 3.

The Cambridge congressman said he believed Congress would, as mandated by the deficit-reduction law, make a concerted effort to balance the budget by cutting federal programs.

"The big question is," O'Neill said, "where will those cuts be made? How much more can we cut?"

He said Reagan's fiscal 1987 budget proposal would eliminate 1.5 million students from qualifying for financial aid.

"Why should we pull the ladder up?" O'Neill said. "The government isn't the enemy of the people."

An hour before, in a gathering inside his office, Kerry also blasted Reagan's budget and defended his support for Gramm-Rudman.

"You're better off under automatic cuts [with the law] than the cuts over the last five years," Kerry said. "Some of the cuts are totally protected" under the law.

Kerry said he hoped Gramm-Rudman would force Congress to reassess its priorities.

"Never in the course of five years has President Reagan put in a balanced budget," he said. "The cuts of the last five years in every program that matters to you, that matters to me, has been cut beyond anything we've ever seen.

"I finally said to myself, this is crazy."

Near the end of the meeting, SAFA member Doug Ewing delivered the group's traditional plea that legislators support financial aid for college students.

"It's hard to be from Massachusetts, with 118 colleges and universities, and not understand what it means," Kerry responded.

With Boston's WCVB-TV channel 5 tracking "a day in the life" of the speaker, O'Neill took advantage of the publicity to reiterate his opposition to Reagan's request for $100 million in aid to anti-Sandinista guerrillas. Two House panels yesterday voted against the request.

"If you can do it in a diplomatic manner in Haiti without bloodshed and in the Philippines without bloodshed, the might of our nation ought to be able to do it in a diplomatic manner in Nicaragua," he said.

At 3 p.m. yesterday, SAFA members boarded a bus to return to Amherst.

Guerrilla theater expresses trauma of rape

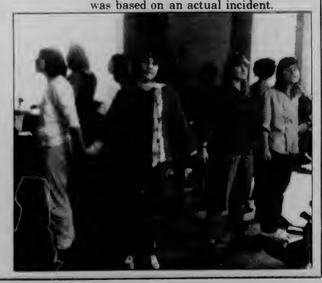
REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

About 60 people relaxing or studying in the Cape Cod Lounge yesterday afternoon were interrupted by 11 women who gave a "powerful" and "shocking" performance on aquaintance rape.

Two women walked solemnly into the lounge beating a drum. All the previously sleeping or studying heads turned as one of the performers announced: "There is a man in this room who has raped a woman."

Nine other women who had been seated around the lounge stood up one at a time. The "guerrilla theatre" focused on rape as something that is painful and devastating - and, worst of all, something that can happen to friends.

Each woman said a line individually:
"It was a day like any other day."
"He was my friend."
"I was alone."
"My door was closed."
"It was rape as soon as he entered the door."
"It hurt."
"He tore out my earrings."
"I woke up with bruises."
"I bled for two days."
"He was my friend."
"He raped me."
"When a woman says "no" she means no. And silence does not mean yes," was the last line.



Then the performers joined hands and said in unison: "This man knows who he is and we know who he is. We do not accept his actions. Let the community not accept his actions."

Women's groups and University police estimate that up to two-thirds of all rapes are committed by assailants who know their victims - hence the term "aquaintance rape" - and that one in every three women will be raped in her lifetime.

In the lounge, the spontaneous audience applauded. Some asked if the story referred to a specific person. "It was very believable. I thought they were trying to confront someone in the room," said David Thaler, a student who was sitting on the floor.

Two women who were watching declined to be identified, but they said they supported the message of the five-minute performance. One woman said it would remain on her mind: 'It was powerful." Another said, "It was sort of shocking."

Organizers later said the presentation was based on an actual incident.

Budget fight forces end of SGA meeting

By PATRICK JOHNSON
and CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate adjourned without passing the Student Government Association budget after a walkout by senators caused the proceedings to collapse in disarray last night.

Senate speaker John Ruddock said, in his opinion, there was no longer a quorum and adjourned the meeting at 10:20 p.m. as students from different factions screamed obscenities and insults across the Student Union Ballroom, where the meeting was held..

The senate was meeting to consider approving its budget for fiscal year 1987. Budget commitee chairman Jordan Rosner had warned that if it were not passed last night, the Student Activities Office could take control of the allocation process.

But members of groups whose funding was eliminated by the proposed spending plan contended that the zero-funding was unfair and that the budget should not be passed.

The senate spent nearly two hours debating parlimentary procedure questions dealing with whether Drum magazine, which had its funding eliminated in the propsed budget, is part of the Afro-American Studies department. Academic organizations are ineligible for SGA funding under its bylaws.

"Drum is not a class; Afro-Am 217 is not Drum," senator Stephen Alfred, of the Third World Caucus, said.

However, Budgets Committee member Mark Johnson read a description from the university course catalogue as evidence that Drum was produced in a class.

After senator Joseph Sparks proposed an amendment which would have provided funding for some of the eliminated groups, senators in favor of funding Drum walked out of the meeting, apparently frustrated by the proceedings.

House panels deny rebel aid package

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two House panels, ignoring President Reagan's argument that the United States must be spard sending "our own American boys" to Nicaragua, voted yesterday to recommend against giving $100 million to rebels fighting the Sandinista government.

The House Intelligence Committee voted 9-7 against the aid package. A short time later, the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere voted 8-5 against the proposal.

The two sets of votes in the Democratic-controlled panels marked the opening salvo in legislative battles over Reagan's proposal. The votes came shortly after Reagan said that lawmakers faced "a historic decision."

Nine of the intelligence committee's 10 Democrats voted against the proposal, with only Rep. Dan Daniel of Virginia joining with the Republicans. Despite the committee's opposition, however, the request for $70 million military aid and $30 million logistical aid must still go to the House floor.

Reagan earlier had told a White House audience that "if we give them the aid they need, the Nicaraguan people can win this battle for freedom on their own. American troops have not been asked for and are not needed."

Reagan's appeal came shortly before the two panels were scheduled to vote on the request, which includes $70 million in military assistance and $30 million in non-lethal aid.

"We must make sure they U.S. troops never are needed," Reagan told members of a Jewish organization. "We send money and material now so we will never have to send our own American boys."

"But if the members of Congress hide their heads in the sand and pretend the Nicaraguan threat will go away, they are courting disaster and history wil hold them accountable," he said. "Nothing less than the security of the United States is at stake."

Earlier, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger argued that the leftist Nicaraguan government was becoming a "second Cuba on the American mainland meaning the Warsaw Pact will have effectively outflanked us."

Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., an intelligence committee member, said yesterday's vote indicated that Reagan's proposal faces major obstacles in the Democratic-dominated House.

South Africans protest at funeral

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - At least 30,000 black mourners, joined by hundreds of whites, turned a mass funeral for 17 black riot victims yesterday into a vast demonstration of opposition to apartheid.

The throng packed a soccer stadium in Alexandra, a squalid black township wedged among the richest white suburbs of Johannesburg. In the crowd were black activist Winnie Mandela and diplomats from seven Western nations, including the United States.

Among clergymen of all races was the Rev. Beyers Naude, 70, an Afrikaner whose spiritual journey from faith in apartheid to the struggle for black rights has made him a symbol of white liberalism.

"No one is free in this country as long as the black man is not free," Mike Beea, president of the Alexandra Civic Association, told the mourners.

University professionals will vote on unionization

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

An election to decide whether or not the Office and Professional Employees International Union or the Massachusetts Teachers Association will represent University professional employees is scheduled for May 1.

More than 1400 employees at the Boston and Amherst campuses are eligible to vote, according to Gerry Scoppettuolo, staff assistant at the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy. If professionals vote to unionize, the process for contract negotiations would begin immmediately, he said.

Professional employees are the only non-union workers at the Amherst campus. The Board of Regents of Higher Education will be legally bound to negotiate with them if they vote to unionize.

In 1982, a union drive failed when employees voted against representation by MTA, which also represents UMass faculty.

SCERA staff assistant Debbie Piltch, a member of the OPEIU organizing committee, said, "We are convinced that on May 1 we will have a victory." She added that the University will be more responsive to the needs of professionals if they unionize.

Scoppettuolo said, "OPEIU is the only union to come in and help us organize. Over the past year the union has put thousands and thousands of dollars into organization" and resources.

WMUA radio staff assistant Bill Stepchew, who has worked at the station for six years, said, "After one or two it was very clear to me that professionals needed a union. It's just a matter of time before a union comes in."

Organizational meetings, two forums and a newsletter will be used to educate professional employees about OPEIU, Piltch said.

Scoppettuolo said a professional union would not necesarily be at odds with the University, because increased input by professionals would help UMass as a whole.

Members of OPEIU said there were no overt obstacles to unionization. Scoppettuolo said, "When we had a forum several months ago...nobody came forth to argue the 'no union' option."

One reason for the renewed union drive, which began in mid-1984, is the implementation last summer of the Olney study recommendations, creating a new wage classification system.

The system reclassified many professional staff positions and set new wage caps. Many professionals were upset by the new system because they said it provided a poor grievance prodedure and diminished their supervisory status.

Counseling Center Psychologist Si Keochakian said, "During contract negotiations the Olney study will be high priority."

Lobbying trip: hurting feet, and even bloodshed

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON- An eight-hour bus ride through the night that made two days feel like one, a shooting across the street from the Skyline Inn where the group stayed and sore feet were the unglamorous parts of a trip to the nation's capital by 46 University of Massachusetts students this week.

Yesterday, members of Students Advocating Financial Aid headed back to Amherst, confident they did their best during three days of meetings with legislators and their aides to stress the importance of higher education and student aid.

"I think people listened to us, and this is what makes SAFA attractive and professional," said Peter Alfano, a senior political science and economics major, on his second SAFA trip. "We weren't jumping up and down wearing signs. We were very informed. We spoke our piece."

A typical SAFA day began with a 7 a.m. wake-up call to all 12 hotel rooms. But Monday, no calls came and most of the group overslept.

After wake-up, students had to make the trek about five blocks up South Capitol Avenue to the Rayburn Building, the office building for most members of the House of Representatives, adjacent to the Capitol Buiding.

By 9 a.m., phone calls and visits were made to various offices on both sides of Capitol Hill. The goal: to meet with House and Senate members or their legislative aides.

After a full day of lobbying, the students would head back to the Skyline to nurse their tired feet.

"It's a kind of trip that makes you feel good," said Eric Sokol, a senior political science major, during the eight-hour return trip. "It's also a time to meet more people, to party and to visit a great city."
